Subsidy Plan To Support Price Limits Under Study

Economic Board Idea Supplanted; WLB Denies Wage Rise to AFL Union

By Ben W. Gilbert
Post Staff Writer

Price Administrator Leon Henderson and other high Administration officials are making a new study of the possible widespread application of subsidies to support price ceilings, a development that has led to predictions that the plan to create an economic high command with supreme authority over all phases of the President's cost of living program will be abandoned, it was learned yesterday.

This new development occurred on the eve of a return visit to the White House by the heads of the American Federation of Labor and the C. I. O. to discuss the proposed new anti-inflation program which the President is scheduled to reveal on Labor Day. The labor chiefs have expressed opposition to any program which would impair the integrity of the War Labor Board.

WLB Denies Raise Plea

At the same time, the War Labor Board modified its "little steel" wage stabilization formula to deny an increase to 1750 employes of two Lever Brothers Co. plants even though the formula called for an increase. The WLB action which observers viewed as a "get tough" action, part of an effort to prove that the board is capable of stabilizing wages, was justified on the ground that the company's wages were already ahead of competitors and that any increases would only exaggerate existing inequalities.

Usually informed Government sources who were predicting last week that the President would set up an "economic stabilization authority" or council with overall powers to check inflation, refused to reaffirm their predictions, but instead stated yesterday that "almost anything could happen now."

Plan Deemed "Dead"

One source stated that the economic council idea might be retained with advisory authority over the application of subsidies. A high labor official asserted that he now believed the plan "dead," but another source stated with assurance that he believed the council would remain in the picture with Gov. Herbert Lehman of New York as its chairman. Another source acknowledged that the council plan might be abandoned, but that it would not make any difference as long as appropriate policy directives were sent to the agencies involved.

Among the reasons advanced for a possible decision to scrap the proposed council plan which was originally advanced by Special Presidential Adviser Samuel I. Rosenman, judge of the New York Supreme Court, are the following:

That the high Government officials involved could not agree on defining its authority.

That Henderson, original advocate of firm overall controls, is now afraid that the proposed setup will deprive him of power to determine pricing policy.

Dies' Charges Prove False, Biddle Says

Attorney General Biddle reported to Congress yesterday that investigation had proved the falsity of sweeping charges that the Government had many subversive employes.

The 4579 complaints received, Biddle reported, justified only 38 dismissals and 13 cases of other discipline.

The Attorney General declared the investigation wasted the time of a large staff of FBI men needed for really important war investigations.

Biddle added that most of the charges ought never to have been brought, saying this was "conspicuously true" of the list of names submitted by Representative Martin Dies (Democrat) of Texas, chairman of the House Committee on Unamerican Activities.

Dies promptly retorted with a press release which said that people "more interested in winning the war than the November elections" do not agree with Biddle.

Kanzler Appointment an Issue

WPB Voice Equal to Nelson's To Be Sought Today by Labor

The War Production Board will be faced today with a delegation of labor leaders who will demand a voice in WPB equal to that of WPB Chief Donald M. Nelson, it was disclosed yesterday afternoon by Philip Murray, president of the C. I. O.

The demand will be presented to Nelson or his vice chairman, William L. Batt, one of whom is expected to meet with WPB's Labor Policy Committee to discuss labor's demands for greater participation in the determination of war production policy, Murray said at a press conference.

Meanwhile, it was reliably reported that Nelson would elevate Wendell Lund, head of WPB's Labor Production Division, to a seat on WPB. However, it is understood that Nelson does not plan to give Lund any more power than that enjoyed by other members of WPB. (Under the executive order creating WPB, all authority is placed in Nelson's hands. WPB meeting as a board has only advisory powers.)

WPB's failure to consult labor in selecting Ernest Kanzler as director general for operations succeeding Amory Houghton, who resigned, will also be discussed, the C. I. O. chief said. Kanzler, who was once a vice president of the Ford Motor Co., had previously been appointed deputy chairman of WPB in charge of program progress over the protests of the C. I. O. United Automobile Workers.

A spokesman for Nelson explained that Nelson had not realized that labor wanted to be consulted on specific appointments, but thought instead that labor wanted actual positions in WPB. He added that Nelson was prepared to appoint qualified labor officials to WPB posts provided they agreed to divorce themselves from their union connections.

WPB Slashes Nonpriority Construction

Revision of Original Order Reclassifies Civilian Projects

The War Production Board yesterday cut drastically the amount of civilian construction to be allowed without specific authorization.

In a revision of the original conservation order which placed all civilian construction under rigid control, WPB reclassified types of construction and reduced in many cases the amount of construction for which no authorization is necessary.

At the same time, WPB warned prospective builders against making commitments for materials until permission to build has actually been given. The fact that a builder has necessary materials on hand and does not need priority assistance will not govern whether he should be permitted to use the materials in construction, officials said.

New classes of construction, together with their present and future cost limits, with an increase permitted for multiple residential while the others are reduced or unchanged, will be:

Residential, $500 and $200; multiple residential, $500 and $1000; agricultural $1000, unchanged; industrial $5000, unchanged; certain types of commercial, $5000 and $200; other types of commercial, including highway, sub-surface and utilities construction, $5000 and $1000.

Including among the types of commercial construction reduced from $5000 to $200 are buildings for lodges, associations, fraternities or sorority houses, auditoriums or assembly houses. Also included are buildings designed for occupancy by not more than five establishments selling goods, food or drink, or providing services. In the latter group are small stores, soda fountains, bars, and tailor, barber and cobbler shops.

The WPB said large quantities of materials had been going into such construction under the original

Spending Tax Plan Undergoes Overhauling

Income Levy Offset, Limited Forced Savings May Be Provided

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

Treasury experts last night were reported redrafting their unique new spending tax plans to provide individuals with an income tax offset and possible limited application of compulsory savings.

Chairman Walter F. George of the Senate Finance Committee conferred with Treasury spokesmen at the Capitol and later returned with them to the Treasury, as presentation of the plan was delayed for the second successive day.

George is understood to favor reduction of the steeply increased individual income taxes approved by the House if direct taxes on spending are to be superimposed.

Forced Savings May Be Tied In

It was also reported that the Treasury had been considering a compulsory savings tie-in with the plan, which might permit money paid in on the first bracket of the spending tax to be held as a credit and later refunded to individuals after the war.

If neither modification is included, the committee appeared certain to discard the novel spending plan entirely, or write in important modifications of its own.

Patent Office Decentralization Reported Slowing War Work

By Jerry Kluttz

Richmond, Sept. 2.—Patent Office employes who were moved here last winter miss the excitement of Washington and some of them are still homesick, but generally speaking they're glad to be 100 miles from the hectic wartime Capital for the duration. The fantastic but often true stories of Washington congestion and high prices, one official believes, saved the ancient Federal agency from disastrous disintegration. The stories are a comfort to the many employes who were forced to pull up their roots from the Nation's Capital. A visitor from Washington, like myself, is quizzed about the "madhouse" conditions.

KLUTTZ

Nevertheless, the employes are looking forward to the day when they'll return to Washington with the Patent Office. A few have bought homes here and appear to have settled down for life. Several have refused better offers of jobs in Washington. The vast majority, however, are living under temporary conditions until after the war, when they expect to return to Washington. More than 100 employes commute between Richmond and Washington. They spend weekends with their families in Washington.

The Patent Office has an enviable record for being able to hold onto its employes. The average decen-

WPB Erases Unit Ruling Small Orders

Contract Distribution Branch Liquidated; Other Agency Takes Over Its Burden

By Robert De Vore
Post Staff Writer

In the first wholesale housecleaning in its history, the War Production Board yesterday liquidated its Contracts Distribution Branch, distributing dismissal notices to each of the organization's 174 Washington employes.

By the move the board wiped out the organization it had set up to see that small business was given a larger part in war and essential civilian production through subcontracting of major contracts and other means.

Burden Transferred

This function, which WPB has been sharply criticized in Congress and elsewhere for failing to exercise as fully as possible, will be carried out for the most part by the Smaller War Plants Corporation.

The corporation was established recently by Congress for the purpose of expediting subcontracting and providing small business with financial and managerial assistance, but has yet to operate except in isolated instances.

Dismissal notices were received by employes of the branch within about two weeks after enunciation by WPB Chief Donald M. Nelson of a new "get tough policy" and published reports that one reflection of that policy would be a WPB housecleaning.

Officials stated yesterday that the dismissals ought not to be interpreted "too closely" as a manifestation of the new policy. Their explanation was that the branch, since the creation of the Smaller War Plants Corporation, has outlived its usefulness. It was observed, however, that under similar circumstances in the past WPB has rarely discharged employes but has transferred them to other jobs.

Effective Sept. 15

Liquidation of the branch was made effective September 15, the effective date of the resignation of Amory Houghton, WPB director general for operations, who ordered the large-scale shutdown. The text of the dismissal order follows:

"By order of the director general for operations, the Contract Distribution Branch is discontinued as of the close of business September 15. On that date you will be placed on annual leave, and your services will be terminated as of the date of expiration of your accrued annual leave."

The order was signed by Francis J. Sette, executive officer for the office of operations.

It was directed to "each officer and employe" of the branch. Thus it would appear to include Basil T. Bonnot, acting branch chief, who declined to comment.

The liquidation verdict spared some 2200 field employes of the branch who recently were absorbed into the WPB's regional organization. These workers now help man the big WPB offices in industrial

Stalingrad's Danger Grows As Nazis Again Pierce Line; Allies Stand Firm in Desert

Organized Defense Areas Unpenetrated; Artillery, Planes Lay Down Heavy Fire

By Stephen Barber
Associated Press Staff Writer

Cairo, Egypt, Sept. 2.—Planes and guns heavily bombed and shelled Axis forces in the Western Desert today and so effective was their resistance to Axis pressure that the British commander declared the organized defense areas still were holding.

As the desert artillery kept up steady cannonading on the southern, and most critical, part of the front and Allied planes shuttled on bomb missions over the battlefield, Lieut. Gen. B. L. Montgomery, field commander of the British Eighth Army, said:

"In no place and in no part of the Eighth Army area have the enemy penetrated our organized defense area."

General Montgomery reviewed the fighting thus far in which the real battle between major formations has not yet been joined. There was no ground activity last night.

The three days of the fighting thus far have been spent in getting into position for the main combat.

British and American planes were carrying a heavy share of the fighting, both on the principal battlefield and in auxiliary fields supplying the Axis troops at the front.

Heavy bombers of the United States Air Forces attacked shipping in the eastern Mediterranean yesterday, hitting one vessel and almost hitting four others in a convoy, and hitting four ships and possibly a fifth in a raid on Candia, Crete, a link in the Axis supply chain.

No U. S. Planes Lost

United States Army Air Force fighters returned to their headquarters night after completing the heaviest day since they entered the battle in this area. They flew as escorts to bombers, and did not lose any planes.

The accurate bombing of the R. A. F. planes, which the Americans were helping protect on forays behind the El Alamein front, drew high praise from Brig. Gen. Auby Strickland, commander of the American fighters in this area. He called it splendid; further, he thanked the British fliers on behalf of the Americans for the way in which the experienced British were aiding the United States pilots to learn desert warfare.

The R. A. F. last night raided Tobruk, and with the help of naval planes blew up an enemy ammunition dump near the Qattara Depression, on which the southern end of the front is tacked.

Advanced ground elements met the thrust of Nazi Marshal Erwin Rommel's tanks on the southern rim of the bottleneck between Qattara Depression and the sea. The El Alamein front on the north

Navy Set to Promote Fliers, 'Weed Out' Older Officers

By John G. Norris
Post Staff Writer

Secretary Knox announced yesterday that plans have been completed for the special advancement of naval fliers—ahead of other officers—to meet the need for additional ranking airmen in the expanding naval organization.

He asserted that the step should "completely satisfy" those who have been objecting that naval aviators were held in subordinate positions while nonflying men ran the Navy.

At the same time the Navy Secretary disclosed that "very rigid" special physical examinations have been ordered for the older and ranking officers of the service "to insure that only those officers whose physical condition warrants will remain in posts of responsibility."

130 Officers Being Examined

The order to weed out the physically unfit from the high command affects all officers who will be past their fifty-eighth birthday this year. Some 130 officers—mostly admirals and captains—are now going before medical boards.

Among those required to take the special physical exams are Admiral Ernest J. King, commander in chief of the United States Fleet; Admiral Royal E. Ingersoll, Atlantic Fleet commander; Vice Admiral Robert L. Ghormley, in charge of American forces in the Battle of the Solomons, and many other chiefs.

In announcing the completion of plans for advancing naval aviators, Secretary Knox said that promotion lists of selected officers have been prepared and approved by President Roosevelt.

Secret List

These lists of officers selected for temporary war promotion—regular line officers as well as aviators—will not be made public, it was said.

"Promotions will be made from these lists as the needs of the service require," the Navy Secretary stated. "In view of the rapidly expanding aeronautical organization, it may be expected that temporary promotions of naval aviators will occur at earlier dates than regular line officers."

Knox was asked if the step would meet the objections that have been made that the Navy lacks sufficient air-trained officers in key commands afloat and ashore.

"It will completely satisfy those objections," he answered.

Naval airmen were gratified at the announcement of the program to remedy the situation—the need for which has been pointed out in re-

Belfast Mob Stones Auto Of U. S. Officer

Disorders Protest Hanging of I. R. A. Youth for Murder

By the Associated Press

Belfast, Sept. 2.—The automobile of a United States Army officer was stoned today and two stray American soldiers in the forbidden streets of Belfast were angrily challenged, "Why don't you go home?" by crowds protesting the hanging this morning of a young Irish outlaw.

The situation was generally calm, however, with violence confined to isolated incidents after the initial upsurge of feeling when notice was posted on the prison door that Thomas J. Williams, 19, had been executed for the murder of a policeman last Easter.

Occupants of the U. S. Army Medical Corps car carrying a Captain C. Turner escaped injury.

The presence of the two American soldiers afoot among the crowds was not explained, for the streets of Belfast were declared out of bounds for 48 hours from last midnight to avert any incidents by the outlawed Irish Republican army.

Crowds deriding their presence as British allies were dispersed by police charging with nightsticks.

Belfast police charged that terrorists from Eire crossed the frontier, ambushed a police prowl car and fired on it with tommy guns and automatics in South Armagh about a mile from the Eire-Ulster border.

R. A. F. Heaps New Havoc on Saarbruecken

Russians Bomb East Prussia, Occupied Poland at Same Time

By the Associated Press

London, Sept. 2.—More than 200 R. A. F. bombers spread fire and ruin in the German coal and iron center of Saarbruecken last night in a heavy raid described officially as "an outstanding success" while Russian airmen attacked East Prussia and occupied Poland in another example of destructive teamwork.

A communique said only three bombers were lost in the Saarbruecken attack, the second on that city and area since last Friday night. The loss was the lowest percentage since the R. A. F. began its mass raids on Germany.

"If there's a building that's not burning I'll be surprised, indeed," one Canadian flier said after the raid.

"Everything seemed to go up in the air."

All Soviet planes returned safely, the Russians added.

The Germans made several small raids on England during the day. A small number of casualties was reported after daylight raids on the south and southwest coasts. Two German planes were shot down.

During a night raid on a southwest coast town four persons were killed and several injured. The planes flew low and machine-gunned the town.

Black Market Boogie

Yon Clink Nods to Bootleggers Of Zoot Suits, Gussets or Not

All this zoot suit monkey business is irking the WPB more than a little and if evidence is found of a "black market" for these outlandish garments, in violation of the wool saving regulations, the agency is prepared to deal out punishment in a manner that will be swift, if not downright terrible.

The sharpies and hep cats who continue thus to caparison themselves, a WPB official said, can't be brought to book under the existing regulations, but tailors who might be tempted to make some easy dollars by catering sub rosa are likely to get the limit. The limit is a fine of $10,000 and/or a year in the bridewell.

The warning came yesterday when the official's attention was called to the burgeoning of the craze for the zoot suit with the drape shape, etcetera, apparently on the very heels of the WPB edict proscribing knee length jackets, pleats you could hide a hep cat in, and other sartorial essentricities beloved to Joe Blow and his little friends.

The official, who is a Southerner and thus comes naturally by a healthy contempt for unorthodox dudery, said he never had actually beheld a zoot suit, occupied or otherwise. He said he had seen pictures of them, though, and his tone of voice indicated that he thought something ought to be done about males who wear these things, war or no war.

"Unfortunately, if these jitterbugs are buying their fantastic toggery in a black market, they have only their consciences to deal with," the official added. "The country needs all the wool it can get, because we not only have the Army to clothe, but with a fuel shortage likely next winter, the civilian populace will need more clothing to keep itself warm."

The official indicated, however, that he did not believe the zoot suit craze has affected many persons of mature years and outlook. Calling attention to that part of the order which limits the length of men's jackets to 29¾ inches for a size 37, "with variations permitted in normal proportions," he said he doubted "if any of these zoot suiters are larger than a 37, anyway."

The order also prohibits such frills and furbelows as "tucks, bellows, vents, yokes, pleats, belted backs and gussets." The official said he didn't know exactly what a gusset was, but he didn't think any grown man would be caught in an alley wearing one.

Ex-Marine Shows His Metal But No One Will Haul It Away

John N. Owens, marine in World War I and a would-be benefactor of his country in this one, sat on his doorstep yesterday and pondered long and bitterly on the problem of what to do with nearly a ton of scrap iron of an old furnace—and how to install a new furnace.

Owens, who is a guard with the FWA, even took a day off to dispose of the scrap and at the same time install the new furnace.

"It is," he said testily, "a fine thing when a guy like me, a marine who got wounded at Chateau Thierry and wants to do something to help out in this war, can't give away—give away mind you—a scrap iron furnace."

"And not only that," said Owens, a note of hysteria creeping into his voice, "but I also got other problems. Look out there!"

He pointed to a pile of new furnace parts neatly stacked in the front yard.

"The police say that I've got to move that into the basement because the front yard is not my property. Well, darn it, where am I gonna put it?"

"All day long I've tried to give that stuff away. There's some good metal in that pile. I've called junk yards. One of them sent two men around, but they just looked at it and shook their heads and said they couldn't get it through the door. And here's the payoff!

"I called Donald Nelson."

Here Owens stopped talking and looked off into space.

"The secretary said she didn't know of any way she could come and get it. And that was that."

Germans Call Up Vast Reserves for All-Out Assault On Vital Steel City

By Eddy Gilmore
Associated Press Staff Writer

Moscow (Thursday), Sept. 3. The Germans are rushing large-scale reserves of aircraft, tanks and troops from the rear for an all-out attack on the wavering defenses of Stalingrad, dispatches from the front said today as the Soviet command acknowledged a new breakthrough southwest of the city.

Fresh Hungarian and Rumanian divisions also were reported hurrying to join in the assault on the Volga River city. The Soviet midnight communique announced that the Red army had "retreated to a new defense line" after fighting stubbornly against 150 tanks supported by swarms of planes.

A dispatch from the Moscow front, however, reported Russian gains to the west despite fierce enemy resistance. Two populated places were said to have been captured.

Northwest of Stalingrad, the Red Army apparently was holding against violent Nazi onslaughts, but the fate of Stalingrad grew more critical hourly.

German troops also had reached a zone in the Caucasus "northwest of Novorossisk," the Russian Black Sea naval base, the midnight communique acknowledged, while the Red Army still held at Mozdok, 60 miles west of the Russian oil fields of Grozny in the middle Caucasus.

Pay Dearly for Gains

"Southwest of Stalingrad," the communique said, "our troops fought stiff engagements with large enemy tank and infantry forces which broke through into our defenses. In one sector the Germans hurled into attack about 150 tanks. Our troops defending this line disabled and destroyed by artillery fire about 30 enemy tanks.

"However, a group of German tanks succeeded in penetrating into our lines. After stubborn fighting our troops in this sector retreated to a new defense line."

Northwest of Stalingrad, the Russians reported the Red Army had withstood a constant pounding and delivered a number of flanking blows against the Nazis. One unit alone was said to have destroyed eight Nazi tanks, 12 ammunition trucks, and seven antitank guns, while annihilating a company of German infantry.

Fighting Flares at Voronezh

South of Krasnodar in the Caucasus, the Russians said their troops were annihilating a trapped enemy group, while west of that city the Red army fought heavy defensive engagements "with the enemy advancing in the direction of Novorossisk."

Girls in Services Talk a Good Sin, British Probe Finds

London, Sept. 2 (AP).—When it comes to sin, the young women of Britain's uniformed services talk a more risque game than they play, a government investigating committee concluded tonight.

Appointed to inquire into what was described as "malicious" talk about the girls of the ATS, WAAF and WRNS, the committee reported in a white paper that it found "no justification for vague but sweeping charges of immorality which have disturbed public opinion," adding:

"There is a certain bravado in much talk that takes place between young people . . . and theories often are paraded in conversation which never are put into practice."

Pacific War Council Weighs Jap Moves

War Sidelights

British Deny Binding Nazi Prisoners

London, Sept. 2.—The British War Office tonight denied categorically that any German prisoners captured in the Dieppe raid had their hands tied to prevent them from destroying papers, although a German high command communique today charged that British troops had received an order to that effect and announced that in retaliation British officers and men taken at Dieppe would be put in chains at 2 p. m. tomorrow.

The German communique announcing that British prisoners be put in chains would be revoked as soon as the British government officially withdraws the order on the binding of German prisoners.

"The high command further reports," said the Nazi communique, "that all future wild west measures of this kind, which represent the disgrace and lack of respect for gallant soldiers, will be immediately answered by sharp reprisals."

Chance That Threat To Siberia Is Feint Is not Eliminated

The probability that a Japanese attack on Siberia was "purely a matter of time" was studied yesterday by the Pacific War Council, which at the same time refused to eliminate the chance that Japan's threats in that direction might be a gigantic feint.

With considerations of this possible major development on the Pacific front, the council received from President Roosevelt an "encouraging" report on the situation in the Solomon Islands. British Ambassador Lord Halifax said the President "gave us some estimates on the relative air losses in the Solomons."

Last weekend the Navy announced that United States Marines were "well established on six of the islands. That report said six more Japanese planes had been shot down, bringing enemy aircraft losses to 111 since the assault was launched three weeks ago.

Soong Gives Estimate

An estimate that the Japanese attack on Siberia was "purely a matter of time" was given to the council members by Chinese Foreign Minister T. V. Soong. Chinese authorities, Soong said, "believe the Japanese are all in readiness to attack."

Not only was the resignation of Japanese Foreign Minister Shigenori Togo, friendly toward Russia, taken into consideration in the council's study of the probable next Japanese move in the Pacific, the members weighed also, as pointing toward a probable move on Siberia, the recent withdrawals of Japanese troops from China.

On the other side of the ledger was the possibility that the very obviousness of Japanese movements toward Siberia might indicate a projected move in some other direction. It was recalled that when Japan struck last year at Pearl Harbor it was while she was making obvious moves toward Thailand.

Duplicity Not Overlooked

Speculation as to where the Japanese blow, in case it was not to fall on Siberia, might be directed against India, Australia, Alaska or Hawaii. The desirability for the Axis of a movement to join the hands of Japan and Germany in the Middle East was admitted.

Lord Halifax indicated the council had not overlooked the Japanese habit of duplicity when he said there had been "some discussion of the particular possibilities of Japanese strategy and what the Japanese might have had in mind."

Prime Minister Peter Fraser of New Zealand met with the council. Maxim Litvinoff, Russian Ambassador, is not a member, though it was expected a Japanese thrust at Siberia would bring him in at once.

Air Losses Compared

London, Sept. 2 (AP).—Axis air losses during the first three years of the war were listed by British sources tonight as 8985 machines destroyed as against 6231 British aircraft lost.

Hospital on Wheels

London, Sept. 2 (AP).—The United States Army is establishing a new type of mobile front-line surgical unit to deal with casualties, Col. Paul R. Hawley, chief surgeon of United States forces in the European theater, said today.

"We now are training surgical teams of three doctors, one nurse and two enlisted men to go right into the field to treat casualties," Colonel Hawley explained.

"In modern warfare with the enemy often in your rear there is no room for the old World War type hospitals close behind the lines."

Sees Poor Postwar World

Chicago, Sept. 2 (AP).—Dr. Hans Elias of Middlesex University predicted today the postwar world would be so poor that women would have to return to their great-great-grandma's spinning wheel and men would have to build their own cottages.

"There will be no cars, radios, washing machines or refrigerators in the world that will exist after the war," contended the Waltham, Mass., educator. "The masses of the people will be impoverished by the burdens which the war imposes upon everyone."

cent articles in The Washington Post. They wondered, however, at the decision not to make the promotion lists public.

Commenting on the order for special rigid physical examinations for officers 58 or older, Secretary Knox said that the Navy was determined that only men in prime physical condition should hold commands at sea or important posts ashore. Those who fail on the tests will be retired, it was said, though in individual cases they might be employed as retired officers in shore billets.

Mozdok (probably the Terek), and "our troops beat out enemy attacks," the communique said. Soviet artillery also was reported to have destroyed three German armored cars, eight tanks and three speedboats operating on the river.

Fighting also flared up on the west bank of the upper Don at Voronezh where the Russians said Soviet artillery repulsed Nazi tank attacks and destroyed a number of guns, 68 ammunition carts and an enemy infantry company.

(The German high command claimed that mechanized troops north of Stalingrad had driven to the Volga. Shipping on the stream was being subjected to both gunfire and aerial bombardment, the Germans claiming that an oiler was sunk by air action in the estuary south of Astrakhan. The Germans also reported progress in the Black Sea area of the Caucasus, south of Anapa, and said they had repulsed new Russian attacks on the central Front and on the Leningrad Front south of Lake Ladoga.)

Special Alpine units were being employed by the Nazi command in the passes which traverse the high, wild mountains of this area. A splendid highway leads along the coast from Anapa (which the Germans say they have captured) to Batum, below the main Caucasus range.

Battle correspondents of the army newspaper Red Star provided the first details of the dangerous German advance southwest of Stalingrad.

They reported the first German wedge was hammered into the depths of the Soviet defenses at the end of a full day of fighting, with two fresh divisions leading Marshal von Bock's charge.

The attack was delivered by two columns. Eighty tanks were employed in the van, with truckloads of infantry moving into action at dawn.

At least 100 German planes were over the Russian positions.

By midday the Red army had turned back both the leading columns. Then more German troops and new machines came up.

A second assault was launched in the afternoon.

While the German fighter planes sought to keep Red gunners from their batteries, dive bombers blasted every position they could find. Then the German tanks and infantry rushed forward again.

By the end of the day the superiority of the German numbers had its effect. The invaders were wedged into the Soviet positions, and the Red Army fighters retired to new lines.

Red Star also brought fresh details of the fighting northwest of Stalingrad.

Von Bock was pressing his efforts to get fuel and ammunition by airplane to the forces hammering at the city. Their ammunition was reported so low that the commander of the Nazi seventy-ninth infantry division gave orders to cease fire at single objects until more supplies reached the front.

Allies Hold Back Axis in Desert

The Axis armor was reported concentrated between El Himeimat, a 600-foot sentinel hill near the northeast tip of the depression, and the ridge of El Ruweisat, a dozen miles northward.

Main Battle Zone

The main battle zone lay in the lower ground between these two elevations, with Rommel's progress having tended to swing the lines toward a northwest-southeast direction.

General Montgomery gave the following picture of the battle:

The fight began shortly before midnight last Sunday when the Germans put on two brief raids on the Alamein positions, both of which were repulsed.

During the same first night, the Allies put on two raids.

South Africans got 51 Italian prisoners in their sortie while New Zealanders picked up 30—also Italians.

It was significant to note that both enemy thrusts were German.

At about 2 a. m. August 31 (Monday) enemy columns—all German—moved forward around and to the north of El Himeimat.

At about 10 a. m. it was evident the enemy was managing to get through our minefields and that Rommel had deployed his whole Africa Corps.

The enemy armor was probing around British positions.

They did not press their attack, however, which was made in a northeasterly direction against our dispositions on the ridge of El Ruweisat. A dozen miles north of El Himeimat.

During the night of August 31-Sept. 1, the Allies made three successful raids in the northern and central sectors, taking some German prisoners.

A successful German-Italian drive eastward through the area between the ridge and the peak would put Rommel past the last eastern tip of the depression, the great sub-sea-level area which has hampered his maneuvers for months past, and place him in a position to swing northward to cut the coastal railway, nip off the British forward positions, and clear the way toward Alexandria and the Nile Valley 80 miles away.

A British communique locating the scene of action said that despite wind-blown, tank-churned sand that befogged the battle area yesterday, the Allies were maintaining "intensive and accurate" bomb attack on the enemy and supporting Allied ground forces.

Allies Claim 50 Planes

[Allied fliers claimed a two-day toll of 50 enemy planes shot down or damaged over the dust-caked battlefield, the United Press reported.]

General Montgomery apparently was holding back his main tank force while blasting away at the Axis with artillery and bombs.

B-25 "Mitchell" bombers bearing the American star insignia made raid after raid on Axis supply and ammunition trucks immediately behind the lines, while American fighter pilots flew with the South Africans in Kittyhawks bearing British markings.

Using large formations of dive bombers escorted by Messerschmitt 109 fighters, the enemy encountered nearly all the Allied formations at various times, but the Allied bombers got effective fighter protection of their own.

The extent of the Axis preparations for the renewed battle was indicated by the fact that on Monday Allied planes attacked a concentration of 2000 Axis vehicles.

Draft Evader Holds Out for Business as Usual

Plainfield, N. J., Sept. 2.—William Norman absolutely refuses to report for induction into the Army on the ground that he has slaved for several years to build up his Newark advertising business, and that it is not cricket for the Army to take him just at the time when his business is beginning to pay dividends.

He is not a conscientious objector, and his widowed mother, Mrs. William H. Hudson, is not dependent upon him for support.

According to his draft board which classified him as 1-A and ordered him to report for induction last Monday, Hudson said, "I'll go to jail before I'll let the Army ruin my business.

He appealed his 1-A classification to both the appeals board and President Roosevelt, and was overruled in each case. However, he still thinks he's right.

The next move apparently is up to the United States Attorney's office in Trenton.

Nazi-Jap Spy Ring Found in Uruguay

Buenos Aires, Sept. 2 (INS).—Uruguayan police have uncovered a widespread Nazi-Japanese spy ring, the newspaper Noticias Graficias reported today in a Montevideo dispatch. Three persons were said to have been arrested.

The government, the newspaper said, is calling an important conference to consider internment of all Axis nationals in Uruguay.

U. S. Technical Mission Off For Brazil

Washington Bureau of Chicago Sun

President Roosevelt dispatched a technical mission to Brazil yesterday to strengthen the industrial economy of America's new South American ally for all-out war against Germany and Italy.

The mission is headed by Morris L. Cooke, former chairman of the Mississippi Valley and Great Plains Commissions, and from 1935 to 1937 administrator of Rural Electrification. Cooke last year was selected by Mr. Roosevelt as an expert to evaluate and adjudicate claims of American petroleum companies against the Mexican government in the expropriation controversy.

Like a similar mission sent to India, the United States engineers will attempt to develop Brazilian resources and potentialities, rather than hitch Brazilian production effort directly to that of America.

The Brazilian Embassy here said that Brazil's most pressing needs now are facilities for manufacture of flat glass, for expansion of Brazilian domestic aluminum production by exploiting bauxite deposits in the state of Minas Geraes, for increased metals output and for development of coffee-bean plastics to replace soybean plastics now imported from the United States.

The mission, organized by the War Production Board, the State Department and the Board of Economic Warfare, will work with Brazilian experts being selected at Rio de Janeiro. Mr. Roosevelt said the objectives of the mission were fourfold:

1. To increase local production of essential products, especially those which formerly were imported from the United States, in order to save shipping space.
2. To convert local industries to the use of substitute raw materials, replacing supplies ordinarily imported.
3. To maintain and improve transportation facilities.
4. To lay the foundation for a long-range strengthening of Brazil's whole industrial economy.

"The program," said Mr. Roosevelt, "will be directed toward a further increase in Brazil's already important contribution of vital materials for her own and the United Nations joint war effort."

Sub Menace Will Be Reduced, Knox Predicts

Secretary Knox said yesterday that he believed the Navy's campaign against Axis U-boats will eventually reduce the menace so that it will "not interfere with victory in the war."

He told reporters at his first press conference here in nearly five months that the submarine war will be a "long and tough one," but that it will be brought under control.

"There has been a steady diminution of ships sunk along our shores of late," he stated. "But when you make it tough for the subs here or off the British Isles, they go elsewhere—to the high seas. That's what's going on now.

Not Yet Solved

"This thing is not by any means solved. It will be a long job and we may never lick it completely, but I believe we can reduce it substantially so that it will not interfere with victory in the war."

Discussing the seizure of Japanese bases in the Solomons, Knox praised the operation as "completely satisfactory."

"I cant say enough about the resolution, determination and courage of the Marines," he added. "It was the largest amphibious operation we have ever had and it went through like clock-work."

Asked about the Aleutians, the Secretary indicated that developments there have not been unsatisfactory to the Navy. He termed the bases at Kiska and Attu seized by the Japs "observation points" and noting the toll taken off enemy ships in the area—24 Jap vessels sunk or damaged—said this "speaks for itself."

The Navy chief added that "as far as we know" the Japanese have been unable to establish bases for land planes on any of the islands they have occupied in the western Aleutians.

Praising the progress of Navy shipbuilding, Knox said the Department was having difficulty training crews to keep up with the new ships. Recruiting is progressing admirably, he stated. The number of men enlisted in August reached an all-time peak, coming close to the total strength of the "peacetime Navy," which ranged from 80,000 to 90,000 men.

Willkie Arrives In Cairo by Plane

Cairo, Sept. 2 (AP).—Wendell L. Willkie, en route to Russia, India and China, among other places, arrived here by plane today.

Willkie was welcomed at the airport by United States Minister to Egypt Alexander Kirk; R. G. Casey, British minister of state for the Middle East; Maj. Gen. Russell L. Maxwell, commander of United States Forces in North Africa; representatives of the British service chiefs, and the Brazilian Minister.

When Will Those Dorms Be Built?

By Christine Sadler
Post Staff Writer

When will work actually begin on the dormitories promised for 15,000 Washington war workers—or has it been decided to scrap plans for some of them as plans for hospital expansion here were partially scrapped?

The next few days probably will tell. The answer to the first part of the question has been "within a few days" for about two months now as the 12-million-dollar dormitory program approved by Congress—after a year or so of debate—has undergone scrutiny from the Federal Works Agency.

The FWA, under recent wartime rulings, must pass on building plans, regardless of how many times they have been passed on before, and then "release" money for the portion of them that seems advisable at the time.

"This Week Sure"

Murray Davis, supervising engineer for the dormitories, said yesterday work would begin this week sure. "We have some money now," he said, indicating that FWA has let go some of the amount appropriated.

Plans for the dormitories have been changed by putting more rooms under the same roof, to conserve materials. It is entirely possible that the big dormitory and reception center planned for the Capitol Plaza site will be forgotten about for many months to come—if not forever.

Since the dormitories will be "tempos" and were designed with conservation of materials in mind, priorities have not been too difficult. Davis said there had been some delay in collecting materials from over the country but no particular priority delay.

It's more a matter of allocation than it is of actually finding the concrete, and FWA could decide—with some justification—that rooms are available in Washington. Not very comfortable ones, always, but rooms.

Three Planned in Parks

The three Suitland, Md., dormitories doubtless will be built, to house workers evacuated there from the District, and those in Arlington to relieve some of the "across the Potomac" congestion. Two structures with 2716 rooms have been planned for East Potomac Park and one with 1891 rooms for West Potomac Park. One for Negro war workers, with 1014 rooms, has been approved for the Langston Terrace locality and a smaller building with 694 rooms for white workers near the Armory site off East Capitol Street.

Money for all may be released eventually—but it looks doubtful. Probably not more than half the 15,000 workers counting on nicely furnished "cubicles" will get them, although bids are being accepted on nearly all the furnishings.

Action on Calling Up Boys Is not Expected Until After Election

By Edward Ryan
Post Staff Writer

Congressional leaders yesterday foresaw little prospect for action before the November elections to permit induction of 18 and 19-year-olds into the Army, while one member said that a year or 18 months might elapse before married men with children would be called to service.

Senator Taft (Republican) of Ohio, who is drafting a general manpower bill which would include some directions for the order of drafting men, said that he was inclined to believe the Administration would wait until after the elections before asking Congressional action to permit the Army's calling men below the 20-year-old level.

Majority Leader Barkley of Kentucky told reporters that he had received no request from the White House or from Selective Service officials for extending the draft to the lower age levels, and that he would not seek legislation until such a request came.

Representative May (Democrat) of Kentucky, chairman of the House Military Affairs Committee, said that he does not intend to seek legislation to bring the 18 and 19-year-old groups into the armed forces until the War Department makes the request.

"The day the War Department asks for an amendment to the Selective Service Act to draft 18-year-olds and 19-year-olds, I'll be ready to render service, whether it's before election day, on election day, or after election day," May said.

May estimated that a year to a year and a half would pass before the married men with children need be called. He explained that he based this estimate on figures given him last week by Selective Service Director Hershey, and that it took into account only the speed with which men could be inducted and trained.

The Selective Service figures, said May, showed that some 2,266,000 more men would be available for military service before tapping the married men with children. During a year, he added, another million men would become 20 years old and eligible for service.

Against the prospect of no action before elections, Senator Gurney (Republican) of South Dakota, said that he intends to press for early hearings on the bill he will introduce today to permit inducting 18- and 19-year-olds. He said he hoped that hearings could be started this week. There appeared to be no chance for this, however, since Senator Reynolds, chairman of the Senate Military Affairs Committee, who would arrange the hearings, was reported out of town on business until Tuesday.

May said the breakdown of the Selective Service estimates of manpower available for service included 218,000 men to come from the total of 610,000 men with dependents other than wives and children; a million men out of three million registrants with wives but no children; 210,000 from the group of a million formerly deferred with minor physical defects; 48,000 from a group of 140,000 white illiterates; 90,000 of 120,000 white men originally rejected for venereal disease; 200,000 from the two million men with major physical defects; and 530,000 men from the group deferred for occupational reasons.

Promotions and New Assignments for Seven District Soldiers Are Announced by Army

Promotions and new assignments have been given seven Washington area men now serving the armed forces in camps throughout the country, it was announced yesterday.

First Lieut. Charles H. Felton, 32, of 614 Rock Creek Church Road Northwest, has been promoted to the rank of captain in the Ordnance Department at the Army's arsenal in Watertown, Mass.

A native Washingtonian Captain Felton is in charge of field service, transportation and salvage at the Watertown Arsenal. He received schooling at McKinley High School here and was graduated from the University of Alabama in 1935. He was employed at the United States Naval Gun Factory here and by the Tennessee Coal & Iron Railroad before being commissioned in the Army in 1940. His wife, Mrs. Margaret Felton, remains here.

Sidney A. Trundle, jr., 34 of 7 Hilltop Road, Silver Spring, Md., and William J. R. Overath of 2055 Park Road Northwest, have been graduated from the Field Artillery Officer Candidate School, United States Army, at Fort Sill, Okla., and have been commissioned second lieutenants.

Lieutenant Trundle, the son of Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Trundle of the same address, is a graduate of Georgetown University and was employed with the Manufacturers Trust & Bank Co. in New York at the time of his entrance into the Army in 1941. He has been assigned to Fort Lewis, Wash.

Lieutenant Overath, who resided here with his mother, Mrs. Magdalen J. Overath, was administrative assistant for the Wage and Hour Division of the Department of Labor at the time of his induction early this year. He is a native of Newark, N. J., and has been assigned to Rice, Calif.

Private Richard Oulahan, jr., former Post reporter, has entered the Officer Candidate School at Fort Sill, Okla., and upon graduating will be commissioned a second lieutenant. Private Oulahan, who is 23, lived here with his mother, Mrs. Mildred B. Oulahan, at 3412 Legation Street Northwest.

Thomas Alexander Newman, 22, of 125 P Street Northwest, has been promoted from the rank of technical sergeant to master sergeant at Will Rogers Field, Okla. Sergeant Newman, the son of Mrs. William R. Newman of the P Street address, entered the service in August of last year.

Charles Nicewarner, 215 Harrison Street, Rockville, Md., and Richard E. Watkins, 13 Lone Oak Drive, Bethesda, Md., have completed the first half of their basic flight training at Perrin Field, Tex. They will take more advanced training and are scheduled to be graduated as second lieutenants in the Air Force.

Corpl. Samuel G. Melnicoff of 1146 Fourth Street Northeast has been promoted to sergeant at Fort Niagara, N. Y. He is a graduate of Syracuse University and is stationed with the Medical Corps detachment of the 121st Reception Center at Fort Niagara.

Signs of Jap Action Against Reds Reported

By the Associated Press

Chungking, Sept., 2.—With the resignation of Shigenori Togo as Japan's foreign minister, reports developed today that fully five Japanese divisions had been moved north in the last month to bolster the Kwantung army facing Siberia and that a large Japanese fleet was concentrated about northern Japan.

The Chungking newspaper, Ta Kung Pao, and the English language National Herald declared editorially that they considered the resignation of Togo, who helped negotiate the Tokyo-Moscow neutrality pact, a forerunner of action affecting Russia.

No Policy Change, Says Tojo

Tokyo (From Japanese Broadcast), Sept. 2 (AP).—A Domei broadcast quoted Premier General Hideki Tojo today as declaring that his assumption of the foreign ministry, vacated by the resignation yesterday of Shigenori Togo, "will not result in any way in an alteration of Japan's foreign policy."

The resignation of Harohito Nishi, Togo's deputy, also was announced today. His successor is Teruichi Yamamoto, chief of the foreign office's East Asia Bureau.

50,000 Jews Near Death In Fortress

By the United Press

London, Sept. 2.—Fifty thousand Jews from Germany and Czechoslovakia have been thrown into the Austro-Hungarian fortress at Terezin and several thousand who are ill or charged with "criminal" acts are in underground dungeons where they are "dying like flies," a Czech government spokesman said tonight.

Everyone sleeps on damp floors and each is given only enough food to keep alive.

"All hope for them has been abandoned," the spokesman said, adding that Jewish leaders in the Czech protectorate had received demands from the Nazis to prepare 15,000 other Jews for deportation.

The spokesman said the Germans had launched a campaign to exterminate Jews from the protectorate and that of 40,000 Jews formerly in Prague only 15,000 now remain. The towns of Pilsen and Brno have been completely cleared of Jews, he said, many of them being sent to Terezin, largest concentration camp in Nazi-controlled Europe.

Outside Terezin's walls thousands of other Jews live in concentration camps where conditions are said to be "horrible."

A European observer declared the Nazis had executed two million Jews in the last three years and that hundreds of thousands of others had been deported.

Meanwhile, the Netherlands news agency Aneta quoted the Moscow radio as reporting that Netherlands patriots in the town of Zaandam blew up five German storehouses filled with wheat and other food reserves held for shipment to Germany.

A German transocean dispatch from Sofia said three "Communists" were hanged in the public square at Gorna Djumaja and their bodies left on the gallows until the following day to impress the populace.

13 Czechs Executed

Berlin (From German Broadcasts), Sept. 2 (AP).—Execution of 13 Czechs Monday on charges of plotting high treason against the German protectorate of Bohemia and Moravia was announced in Prague today.

22 Patriots Slain

Bern, Switzerland, Sept. 2 (AP).—A dispatch from Budapest said today 22 persons, mostly young men and women, were executed by firing squads after sentence by a Croatian court martial on charges of taking letters, food and medicine to insurgents, of possessing arms or of listening to the London radio and spreading anti-Axis reports.

Mary of Britain

U. S. Soldier Thumbs Ride With Queen

By Noland Norgaard
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, Sept. 2.—Private Ora A. Foster, 22-year-old soldier from Rochester, Mich., said today that "like most soldiers I did all the talking" when a lady graciously gave him a lift in her limousine.

FOSTER

That is, he did all the talking at first.

Finally she asked: "You don't know who I am, do you?"

He replied politely, "I can't say as I do."

She identified herself as Queen Mother Mary.

"I couldn't think of a thing to say," Foster confessed.

Foster was walking along an English country road Saturday evening when he thumbed a ride in the big car.

He acknowledged today he should have had some idea of his benefactress' identity when she briskly asked a colonel beside her to go up front with the chauffeur.

But he didn't, and so he talked—for a time—unabashed.

When the Queen Mother asked him how he liked England, he recalled today that he replied casually:

"There's no place like home, but this is a nice place for a vacation."

The Queen Mother remarked that the Americans and Britons should get to know one another better.

A new suspicion that it wasn't just another day in a soldier's life came when the Queen Mother asked another woman in the car to hand her a package.

The reply came: "Yes, Your Majesty."

"I knew that something was wrong then," Foster said.

But by then the car had reached the village of his destination and the Queen Mother identified herself.

Army Identifies 7 Victims of Bomber Crash

Baton Rouge, La., Sept. 2 (INS).—The United States Army tonight identified the seven airmen killed when a medium bomber crashed near the Louisiana State Penitentiary Tuesday night.

The bomber fell in a heavily wooded section about 8 miles north of the prison and bodies of the victims were brought out by pack horse. The dead were Second Lieut. Louis J. Pigoni, pilot, of Oak Park, Ill.; Second Lieut. William E. Evans, copilot, of Freeport, Ill.; Second Lieut. Norman L. Vaughn, bombardier, of Logansport, Ill.; Pvt. First Class Wade H. Fry, engineer, of Asheville, Ohio; Staff Sergt. John P. Dye, radio operator, of Santa Barbara, Calif.; Pvt. Louis H. Labertrandi, jr., of Yonkers, N. Y., and Pvt. Eugene L. Clayton, student-bombardier, of Memphis, Tenn.

Bomber Crashes in Gulf With 3 Men Aboard

St. Petersburg, Fla., Sept. 2 (U.P.).—Military authorities tonight investigated the crash of a medium-sized Army bomber which presumably cost the lives of three men when it plunged into the Gulf of Mexico two miles south of here today.

The plane's occupants, missing and believed killed, were Second Lieut. Stanley A. Hecker, New York; Second Lieut. William Rittenhouse, Parkersburg, W. Va., and Sergt. James E. Anton, Pittsburgh, Pa.

2 Navy Officers Killed in Crash

Corpus Christi, Tex., Sept. 2 (AP).—The Navy disclosed today that two officer students were killed at the naval air station in a midair plane collision.

Both men, Lieut. (j. g.) Louis R. Smith of Montour Falls, N. Y., and Ensign Everett W. Leland of Hamilton, N. Y., were former civilian pilots.

Pilot Forced to Jump

Gary, W. Va., Sept. 2 (AP).—An Army pilot was forced to bail out of his speedy pursuit plane over the McDowell County Mountains from a height of 4500 feet yesterday when an oil or gasoline line broke and the craft burst into flames. Lieut. R. M. Robertson, 22, of Fort Worth, Tex., suffered a slight cut over his eye when he landed.

Spending Tax Plan Goes Back For Revision

of Connecticut, already has served notice he will offer his own compulsory savings amendment which would collect 10 per cent of each retail purchase, give the purchaser a stamp credit, and refund money thus saved after the war period. Other Senators were preparing direct sales tax substitutes.

Randolph Paul, Treasury general counsel, declined to disclose further details of the spending tax, which originally contemplated progressive annual taxes on individual spending, graduated by spending brackets. Recently discussed was a spending tax starting at 10 per cent, in the first $2000 bracket. There would be personal exemptions, credit for dependents and debts and at least part of "saved" income would be exempt.

C. W. Hazelett, retired Connecticut engineer, claimed joint authorship of the plan with Prof. Irving Fisher of Yale. But Hazelett called on Senator George yesterday to protest against Treasury proposals to levy the tax on top of income taxes. Hazelett said his "incentive tax" plan was designed to absorb income taxes and he would prefer its defeat to making it a supertax.

Fisher recently told the committee the plan was not new. He said Ogden L. Mills, while in Congress, introduced a bill for a spending tax. Fisher urged the committee to tax spending with graduated rates, as an incentive to spend less, and take off all taxes on savings, as an incentive to save more. He asked that the tax make deductible all business expenses and reinvestments, all taxes made within the taxable year, in addition to allowances for dependents.

Leaving the Capitol with Senator George, Paul told reporters that "God willing" the Treasury will complete its revisions of the spending tax in time for committee presentation today.

The committee meanwhile at a morning session voted to exempt from the excess profits tax all income from production of eight vital minerals—tungsten, platinum, chromite, manganese, antimony, quicksilver, tin and vanadium. George said the committee wished to encourage production of all of these strategic ores, which are produced in this country in only small quantities.

Washington Flier Wins Flying Cross

CAPT. HENRY G. THORNE, 28, of Washington, whose wife is an employe of the National Geographic Society, has been awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross for "extraordinary achievements" in the closing stages of the battle of the Philippines. Dispatches from General MacArthur's headquarters said Thorne was awarded the cross with seven other fliers for evacuating personnel and valuable records from the islands and for delivery of sorely needed supplies and medicines

Subsidy Plan Weighed to Aid Price Ceilings

ald M. Nelson and Secretary of Agriculture Claude A. Wickard have been unable to decide whether allocation of scarce food supplies, a necessary part of the whole program, should be handled through WPB or through the Department of Agriculture.

Under the proposed subsidy plan, WLB would retain jurisdiction over wages, but subsidies would be paid in cases where WPB-ordered increases create a price "squeeze." Similar subsidies would be paid if parity provisions of the Price Control Act created a similar "squeeze" on food producers, packers, or wholesalers.

In addition to Henderson, Isador Lubin, head of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, and Claude Wickard, Secretary of Agriculture, are reported working on the subsidies plan. Lubin also serves as economic adviser to the President.

The WLB action denying employes of the Lever Brothers a general wage increase was adopted unaimously with labor, industry and public groups concurring in the recommendation of the panel which heard the case. An increase of 10 cents an hour had been requested for 1500 employes of the company's Cambridge, Mass., plant and 5 cents an hour for 250 employes of the company's Edgewater, N. J., plant. The workers were represented by the A. F. of L. United Soap, Glycerine and Edible Oil Workers.

The panel recommended that the increase demand be refused on the basis of the "guiding principles" of the board's formula rather than a strict interpretation of it.

"Under the circumstances, then," the panel said, "if the undersigned are to give due consideration to inequalities and are to avoid a round of general increases in this particular area and in this industry, they cannot make any recommendation which would either create an unequal relationship where one does not now exist, or intensify an existing inequality."

centers to which WPB has delegated a major share of the task of expediting the flow of scarce war materials, watching priorities, checking on production and trying to find ways in which prime contracts may be sublet to smaller businesses.

Taken Unaware

The order caught most Washington employes of the branch by surprise and there were indications last night that they would appeal to Nelson. Some complained that they had been refused releases to take positions with other agencies on the ground that they would be absorbed by the corporation.

Lou E. Holland, corporation chairman and one of Nelson's deputies, told The Post yesterday that he intended at present to employ about seven branch workers.

Branch Business Had Slowed

Although it has been instrumental in distributing between five and six billion dollars worth of subcontracts, the branch in recent weeks has slowed down appreciably, officials stated.

Holland yesterday said his Smaller War Plants Corporation was about ready to exercise its mandate from Congress to aid small businesses. In the first few weeks since taking office July 11, he said, he laid the groundwork for his operations by establishing working arrangements with the war procurement agencies.

Holland Wants Control

Holland was said to be insisting that he be left in complete control of a field organization of practical factory engineers.

Holland was quoted as being anxious to work closely with the WPB facilities utilization branch headed by W. B. Murphy, aided by a corps of able engineers, has uncovered facilities for turning out precise and intricate war mechanisms at the behest of the Army and Navy. In some instances, these facilities have been found in plants which were doing much simpler war work. These contracts could conceivably be made available for distribution by SWPC.

Because he is Nelson's deputy as well as chairman of SWPC, it is necessary that WPB delegate essential authority to Holland in an administrative order. This has not yet been done.

the WPB, a Post reporter interviewed a couple, both long in the trade and justly proud of their reputations. Both said, in sum, that they had never solicited the zoot suit trade and moreover, that they regarded the style as an affront to the human dignity as well as a waste of wool and workmanship.

Neither of these gentlemen would permit themselves to be quoted, though. As one expressed it, "Some of these kids may be prospective customers, when they wear out their funny pants and have to dress like normal people, and I don't want to risk being 'oycotted."

On his way back to the office, the reporter ran across three of the zoot suits aforesaid, trucking down F Street under the propulsion of as many youthful characters of 18 or thereabouts. The pants thereof were only fairish small at the cuffs—that is to say, you could have inserted a razor blade between the skin and the cloth—and the coats completely hid the femora and had fly fronts resembling sawed off chesterfields. Each character's ensemble was topped off with a big apple hat, truly incredible things with 7-inch brims and virtually no crowns. No doubt about it, they were really draped down.

Collering one of the characters, the reporter stated the nature of his quest. Where were the zoot suits bought, and when? (He forebore the temptation to add "Why?" figuring he was going to be given short shrift as it was.)

"Man!" exclaimed the sharpie. "You want a zoot suit, you better freewheel it down to Seventh Street, but fast. They got a few left down there, but they won't last long."

That Man Jackson

"That's right, Jackson," said one of the others, adding sagely, "They can't make no more clothes like these. You know—the war."

Somewhat embarrassed at having his intentions thus misunderstood, the reporter floundered a bit before he could manage to inquire what the cats intended to do when they wore out their guady garb.

"Pops," replied the first character, with only a trace of condescension, "Time these righteous rags are beat, no telling where we'll be. Why blow your top worrying about that?"

That seemed to be the answer to everything, thought the reporter, so he mumbled a farewell to Youth Rampant and trucked on back to the office, thinking of his own youth—when kids wore clothes just as screwy, but there wasn't any war on, and people were saying there would never be another.

Langer Faces Frank Charges Today

Use of Privilege to Send Unauthorized Matter Claimed; Clark to Head Probe

By Dillard Stokes
Post Staff Writer

Senator Langer (Republican) of North Dakota said last night that he would be on the Senate floor today to face charges that his frank was used to circulate advertising matter and forged reports of a subcommittee hearing in which he was interested.

The matter is scheduled to be brought up by the subcommittee chairman, Senator Clark (Democrat) of Missouri, who called the affair "outrageous" when it came to light last week.

Langer denied having anything to do with the frank abuse, declaring he would join in a demand for investigation of both the forgery of the record and the mailing of the advertisement.

Attacked Alaska Highway Route

About three months ago, Langer made a speech violently attacking the route chosen for the highway which the Army is building to supply troops in Alaska. He offered a resolution for an investigation, and this was referred to a subcommittee headed by Senator Clark.

Helping Langer at the subcommittee hearings—both as a consultant and as a witness—was John M. Holzworth, a lawyer.

Langer demanded an extra copy of the stenographer's transcript of the hearings, and gave it to Holzworth. Widely received soon afterward were envelopes carrying Langer's frank, which purported to have been sent out by Holzworth. These envelopes contained Langer's speech, two booklets containing the subcommittee testimony—with many additions, changes and omissions—and a booklet purporting to be a sample chapter from a book by another New York lawyer.

Denied Knowledge

When The Post uncovered this, Langer said he did not know the spurious reports had been printed and did not know who paid for them or for what reason Holzworth sent them out.

Senator Clark's report declared the charges in Langer's resolution were unworthy of investigation, but Holzworth was still repeating them yesterday. From New York he distributed copies of a letter in which he attacked Mayor LaGuardia of New York and called statements by Senator Clark "not true and completely contrary to the facts."

U. S. Troops Arrive In Belgian Congo

London, Sept. 2 (AP).—American troops have arrived in the Belgian Congo, the Belgian Government news agency reported today.

The troops were welcomed warmly at Leopoldville by the population "who admired the spirit and magnificent equipment," the agency said.

The Congo is near the center of Africa athwart the Allied supply route across the continent to Egypt.

OWI, Services Reach Accord On Release of War Statements

Washington Bureau of Chicago Sun

Army and Navy communiques and other releases will continue to be issued through the regular press services of the War and Navy Departments, and not through the office of War Information, Paul Smith, OWI News Bureau chief, declared yesterday.

He emphasized, however, that OWI will have a strong voice in determining what is to be released from military sources, and will work in close cooperation with the Army and Navy in determining public information policies.

Decision as to how far the military shall go in its communiques will be reached each day at a noon-time meeting between high public relations officers of the Army and Navy, OWI Director Elmer Davis, and Smith.

Davis has previously urged that all communiques and other War and Navy Department releases be issued through OWI. Military officials, however, insisted their regular press services contitnue to handle the job.

Smith met yesterday with newsmen regularly assigned to cover OWI. He stressed that OWI has no thought or intention of attempting to "control" the press, but will act rather in a service capacity to help determine over-all war news policies and to assist newspapers in obtaining war news quickly and accurately.

He asked reporters to bring their newsgathering problems and complaints directly to him, and assured them that OWI will go down the line in every instance to see that newspapers obtain all news from all Federal departments and agencies which is held to be proper for publication in view of wartime policies.

Five U. S. Steel Subsidiaries Accept WLB-Ordered Pay Raise

By the Associated Press

Five subsidiaries of the United States Steel Corp. yesterday formally accepted the War Labor Board's directive granting a 5½ cents an hour wage increase, maintenance of union membership, checkoff of dues and a minimum daily wage guarantee to the C. I. O. United Steel workers. They were the Carnegie-Illinois Steel Corp., Columbia Steel, American Steel and kire, Tennessee Coal, Iron anti Railroad Co. and National Tube Co.

J. L. Perry, Carnegie-Illinois president, said acceptance did not signify agreement as to the "fairness or propriety" of the directive, but that "the country is at war."

At the same time, Nicholas A. Zonarich, president of the C. I. O. Aluminum Workers of America, asserted at Pittsburgh that members of his union were renewing "considerable" pressure upon him to call a strike against the WLB refusal to grant requested wage increases. Paul R. Lawson, head of the New Kensington, Pa., local 2, had issued a statement saying that "under no condition will the aluminum workers strike."

Meanwhile a freak phase in labor developments appeared at Indianapolis where an A. F. of L. labor union called a strike of 200 employes of the Columbia Conserve Co. to gain a guarantee of 52 weeks of employment. The company is controlled by employes who own 67 per cent of the common stock and receive a share of the profits.

At Philadelphia James P. Casey, regional representative of the War Production Board, asked his superiors to "take immediate and drastic action" to end a strike of between 300 and 400 freight car handlers on the city's waterfront. Casey, also a union official, termed the walkout "illegal" and a "direct and subversive movement to tie up transportation of our munitions of war." Albert James, longshoremen's local secretary, said the strike was to enforce demands for an increase from 75 to 95 cents an hour.

Several hundred Huntington (W. Va.) workers, whose union affiliation remained clouded, stayed away from their jobs at the Standard Uutramarine Co. after one union spokesman had desribed the strike as unlawful.

Defense Area Fund Raising To Continue

Capital area defense officials last night denied that defense area groups were supposed to cease fund raising efforts and depend upon congressional appropriations for equipment.

Although Defense Executive Lemuel Bolles on Sunday advised groups with surplus funds to invest the excess in War Bonds, rather than to squander it on unnecessary supplies, he said yesterday that those groups which have not yet reached their quota should not relax their fund-raising efforts.

To date the contributions from National OCD have been slight, the most considerable being 20,000 helmets for certified air-raid wardens.

Bolles yesterday rescinded an order on the functions of command in the civilian defense organization, which designated District officials to serve at control centers during air-raids, real or practice, and was resented by the men named, who had not been consulted beforehand.

Fat Salvage Drive To Be Stepped Up

District of Columbia housewives have produced 36,165.9 pounds of gun powder in their kitchens during the past six weeks. They did it by salvaging 27.743 pounds of waste fats.

If that fat, needed in the production of glycerine, should be turned into antiaircraft shells, it would make more than 72,000 of the 37-mm. variety.

With the shortage of meats rapidly affecting the sources of household fats, the importance of the fat salvage program becomes even more important, the D. C. Salvage Committee said yesterday as "how to participate" posters were distributed to grocery stores throughout the city.

Zone 23 Needs Funds, Volunteer Workers

The need for volunteer workers and funds for air-raid equipment were discussed last night at a mass meeting held by air-raid wardens of Zone 23, Columbia Heights, in the Evangelical Reformed Church, Thirteenth and Monroe Streets Northwest.

A committee was appointed to solicit the residents of the area for contributions to the equipment fund.

Heywood Saunders, assistant to Chief Air-Raid Warden William Mileham, spoke on the duties of the air-raid wardens. Four films on different aspects of the war were shown.

New York, Sept. 2 (INS).—Ned Wayburn, noted theatrical producer, 68, died at his Riverside Drive home in New York late tonight.

Friends Hope To Heal Farley, Roosevelt Split

By the Associated Press

New York, Sept. 2.—The potent Democratic political team of Roosevelt and Farley split up two years ago, but friends of genial Jim say he is ready to scratch those 24 months off the record and resume the old partnership.

Intimates of Farley hope that some champion of diplomacy brings the two party leaders together before their estrangement creates what some observers believe might develop into a serious cleavage within the ranks of the National Democratic Party.

So far as is known, no peace moves have been made on either side and the two are no nearer an understanding than they were in the late summer of 1940 when they disagreed over the President's third term campaign.

Any rapprochment wouldn't be easy since so much water has run through the mill—but those who know Farley well say the breach can be closed with a spirit of give and take on both sides, thus creating party harmony before 1944 and removing a fly in the ointment of national unity.

There is no doubt that Farley himself feels keenly the differences with "The Chief," although he has no apologies for the position he has taken.

Right now, his friends say, his one thought is the election of John J. Bennett, jr., as Governor of New York, and that, contrary to rumors, he is taking no active interest in national politics.

Those close to him were pleased that—although Bennett's nomination was construed as a victory for Farley over Roosevelt—Farley has not gloated or even made any comment that might further irritate a delicate situation.

Mead Acts to Bolster Bennett's Candidacy

New York, Sept. 2 (INS).—A Democratic victory on election day is "now our common objective," United States Senator James M. Mead declared today in a move patently designed to bolster the candidacy of Attorney General John J. Bennett, jr., for Governor of New York.

It was Mead's second peace gesture since the Democratic State convention nominated Bennett rather than himself.

Nazis Will Admit Defeat in 1943, Miller Predicts

New York, Sept. 2 (AP).—Douglas Miller, former United States commercial attache in the Berlin Embassy, predicted today the Germans soon would admit an expected defeat.

Miller, now assistant to Elmer Davis, head of the Office of War Information, told the Overseas Press Club:

"Three years ago the Germans said, 'We have won.' Two years ago they said, 'We will win.' This year they say, 'We must win.' Next year they will say, 'We cannot win. And thereafter they'll say, 'We've lost, just as we always expected to'."

Rails Decline To Raise Pay Of Enginemen

By the Associated Press

New York, Sept. 2.—Representatives of railroads announced today through their Eastern Carriers' Conference that they had declined wage increases "as well as other proposals" requested by the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen.

In a formal statement, H. A. Enochs, committee chairman and personnel chief of the Pennsylvania Railroad, said conferences between the committee and union officials which had been in progress since last June, terminated today without agreement.

Accompanying the statement was a letter addressed to D. B. Robertson, the union president, in which Enochs wrote that the conference was willing to join the brotherhood "on a regional basis" in requesting the services of the National Mediation Board under the Railway Labor Act.

The specific wage increases, rules and working conditions sought by the brotherhood were not available immediately.

It was understood that part of the discussions centered about union proposals to extend the Eastern basic wage scale to the West and Southwest and eliminate wage differentials between crews of coal and oil-burning locomotives.

In his letter, Enochs wrote:

"Although we viewed your wage and other demands as being particularly inappropriate at this time, nevertheless, to the end that there should be no curtailment of the essential cooperation between management and employes in the railroad industry, we advanced several compromise proposals. We regret that none of our proposals afforded an acceptable basis for settlement."

Labor to Seek WPB Voice Today

was scheduled last week after representatives of more than 20 A. F. of L. and C. I. O. unions at a meeting called by WPB's Labor Production Division angrily demanded greater labor participation in WPB. Murray said he and William Green, president of the A. F. of L., would attend the meeting.

The C. I. O. executive council in a resolution yesterday stated that "men and women from the ranks of labor must be placed in responsible administrative positions in the War Production Board and all other agencies of the Government."

Murray in discussing the proposal that labor should have a voice equal to that of Nelson disclaimed any intention to "throw bricks at Nelson," but added nevertheless that he felt Nelson represented the point of view of employers.

Asked if he thought divided authority between Nelson and a labor representative would impede production, he replied that since both would have the same objective, this circumstance was unlikely. Asked if he favored a return to the old Office of Production Management setup where Sidney Hillman shared top authority with William Knudsen, Murray urged his questioner to look ahead instead of backward.

Amplifying his position, Murray stated that labor should be consulted by WPB "on all issues affecting actual production in America's vital industries." He added in response to questions that he thought that labor should be consulted on a successor to Reese H. Taylor, recently resigned head of the WPB iron and steel branch. Nelson was reported making canvass of available men in the steel industry to fill the job.

"There ought to be a basic reorganization in WPB, with labor accorded the basic representation to which it is entitled," Murray said.

Stepfather Held in Girl's Fatal Knifing

RUTH TONE, 24-year-old dental hygienist, was found slain in the Beverly, Mass., home of her mother and step-father shortly before midnight Tuesday. She had been stabbed to death

By the Associated Press

Beverly, Mass., Sept. 2.—Roger W. Mason, 49-year-old machinist, was held for the grand jury without bail today after he told Judge George B. Sears he was "very sorry" and attempted to plead guilty to a charge of murdering his stepdaughter, Ruth Stone, 24.

The girl, a Cambridge dental hygienist, was found stabbed to death shortly before midnight in the home of her mother and stepfather, where she had been visiting.

Police Lieut. Francis J. Minton said Mason told him the girl and her mother had been "nagging" him.

Judge Sears ordered a plea of innocent to be entered in Mason's behalf before he was taken to Salem jail. This is mandatory under State law.

Miss Stone, with a friend, Miss Dorothy Brooks, 20, of Cambridge, had been visiting the Mason home and both young women had gone to bed in a studio couch in the living room at about 9:30 p. m.

Police said the assailant, entering the house at about 11:30 p. m., brandished a knife and stabbed Miss Stone, who fled to the dining room, where she again was stabbed, fatally.

Miss Brooks, unmolested, telephone to a doctor, who in turn called police.

They found Mason in the house, but said he declined to discuss the stabbing.

Night Plowing Of British Soil To Aid Planting

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

London, Sept. 2.—A great night plowing campaign is about to be launched by the British Ministry of Agriculture, to insure that all or most of a record wheat acreage is sown by the end of October, it was announced today.

The Ministry of Home Security has relaxed the severe lighting restrictions on tractors to make the program possible. Two masked automobile headlights, one shining to the front and the other lighting up the plow at the rear, will now be permitted. The operator, furthermore, will be allowed to use a dimmed flashlight to make adjustments. These concessions, it was emphasized, will not apply within half a mile of an airdrome.

'Tinless Cans' For Packing Food Proposed

By the Associated Press

Chairman Gillette (Democrat, Iowa, of a Senate Agriculture Subcommittee on Utilization of Farm Crops announced yesterday he would call hearings soon to investigate possibilities of an expanded use of "tinless tin cans" for packing food products.

Gillette said he would call Albert A. Robbins, consulting chemist, to explain the adaptability of his all-fiber, plastic-lined containers, now used for distribution of motor oils, to food products, particularly those containing vegetable or animal oils.

Raymond S. MacMillian, president of the MacMillan Petroleum Corp., Los Angeles, exhibited the cans in a press conference at Gillette's office.

"Ingredients in the formula," he told Gillette, "include corn, other grains, flaxseed, tallow, animal tissues, bones and clay.

"Three different chemical compounds, all impervious to oil and made by direct processing of these ingredients under high heat pressure, are applied to a fiber container to make it durable, leak proof and better in many ways than tin."

He said the first carload of oil in the new, lighter and cheaper packaging had left his refinery and the switchover by his company alone, would save "10,000,000 pounds of metal in a year," and consume 10,000 bushels of corn.

Meanwhile, the War Production Board prohibited the manufacture of oil cans made of any metal for civilian use.

Women Get Plea to Watch Price Ceilings

Cooperation between homemakers and merchants to help prevent "black markets" and inflation was urged yesterday by Mrs. May Thompson Evans, OPA official.

Mrs. Evans, assistant chief of the programs activity branch, consumers' division, OPA, addressed yesterday's session of the Intitute on Catholic Leadership Training, sponsored by the National Council of Catholic Women and held at the National Catholic Welfare Conference.

The speaker urged that women shoppers ascertain marked ceiling prices before shopping and pay no more.

Mrs. Robert G. Angelo of York, Pa., president of the National Council of Catholic Women, sounded the keynote of the Institute yesterday with a reiteration of its motto:

"If we lose the home, we shall have lost the war, and if we lose our children, we shall have lost America's future." Mrs. Angelo has seven children, two of them in America's armed forces, and another son about to go.

Also speaking on the institute program were Mrs. Emily Newell Blair of the War Department, Miss Elizabeth Eastman of the OCD office, and Miss Ruth Ayers of OPA.

How to Help

Mrs. Blair cautioned women with sons in the service against disclosing contents of their sons' letters, warning that valuable information might leak out to the enemy in that way.

That mothers, especially those with children under 6 years old, should enter war industries only as a last resort was the keynote of the morning discussions.

The afternoon roundtable discussions revealed that a Catholic women are doing their bit on the home front. For example, Mrs. Thomas J. Horigan of Meridan, Conn., told how her four daughters are driving Red Cross vehicles at home. Mrs. Horigan is a former board member of the National Council of Catholic Women. Civilian defense efforts in their respective communities also were described by Mrs. J. E. Franchere, Memphis, Tenn., first vice president of the council, and Mrs. Joseph Liskovec of La Cross, Wisc., another council official.

The Rev. Thomas J. Drury, spiritual director of the Amarillo (Tex.) Diocesan Council, spoke last night on the efforts being made to integrate Mexicans of the Amarillo section into Catholic social action work. Institute sessions continue today.

Nation-wide Program Is Designed to Aid Mothers in War Jobs

The Budget Bureau has approved allocation of $400,000 from emergency war funds to initiate a Nation-wide daycare program for the children of war-working mothers, it was learned yesterday.

The program, which will be under supervision of the Office of Defense Health and Welfare Services of the Federal Security Administration, is designed to free mothers for war work as well as to care for thousands of children already "turned loose" by women who have accepted jobs.

Both foster home and group care activities are visualized, with standards and advice coordinated so that the nine Government agencies directly interested in child welfare programs will "speak with one voice."

Counseling Service Offered

A feature of the program will be a counseling service to which mothers contemplating work can turn for answers to their questions about whether to take jobs, whether to work on night shifts, etc.

The War Manpower Commission, while foreseeing the employment of women by the millions, has urged that the mothers of small children think twice before rushing into factories.

Meanwhile the Corporation Counsel's office sent to the House District Committee a draft of legislation which will permit the operation of a public day nursery system for war workers' children in the District's public school buildings.

The proposed bill would repeal a rider which has been attached annually to District appropriation bills, prohibiting the use of the buildings for children of pre-school ages. It further specifically authorizes their use for Federally-financed day nurseries and nursery schools.

To Be Introduced Soon

Representative Randolph, chairman of the committee, said that he would introduce the bill as soon as possible—this week if it could be done. Randolph had asked that the bill be drawn up, after it was learned that the ban on the use of the buildings might make the project impossible, although funds and trained personnel were available.

Randolph had sponsored the program on Capitol Hill, calling several recent conferences of Federal and school officials on the problem as a means of releasing many more District women for war work.

Present plans call for the use of both Lanham Act and WPA funds to finance the schools.

The Lanham Act appropriation specifically provided that the emergency funds could be used for such nurseries, but all of this money is barred from any project that might be construed as charity.

Thus, WPA funds must necessarily be used to provide lunches and similar items for the youngsters.

His Favorite Brunette?

SHE'S OK WITH BOB—After winning the "Miss Texas" title in a beauty contest last year, Iris Bynum, 21, of San Antonio, wanted to go to Atlantic City to seek the "Miss America" crown. Bob, who recently played "My Favorite Blonde," appears to be susceptible to brunettes, too

Philadelphian Is Accused of Warship Fraud

Charles F. Rohleder, a Philadelphia contractor, and three of his employes, were accused yesterday of conspiring to defraud the Government with spurious bids for $200,000 worth of materials for building six light cruisers.

The indictment, returned in the Philadelphia Federal Court, was the third obtained in 10 days by Attorney General Biddle's War Fraud Unit, headed by Tom C. Clark, chief, and John Darsey, assistant.

The indictment set out that on October 29, 1940, the Navy gave a contract for the cruisers to the Cramp Shipbuilding Co., at Philadelphia, and bids were invited for materials for work in connection with them. At least three bona fide competitive bids were required for a contract to be awarded for the materials. The indictment charged that Rohleder and his three employes submitted false bids to meet this requirement.

Upon conviction, the men would face $10,000 fine, or two years in prison, or both.

3 Conspiracy Suspects Post $20,000 Bonds

Three of the five defendants indicted Monday on charges of hampering the war effort by withholding allocation of critically-needed machine tools posted bonds totaling $20,000 in District Court yesterday.

Robert Blee Rhoads, dismissed chief of the WPB's Available Tools Section, deposited a cashier's check of $10,000, after he had been arrested Tuesday night on a bench warrant. Bond of $5000 had been set on each of two accusations against him—conspiracy to violate the War Powers Act by failing to report the availability of 71 machines, worth more than $150,000, and presenting fraudulent claims for traveling expenditures.

The others were Clarence J. O'Brien and Frank L. O'Brien, jr. of the O'Brien Machinery Co. of Philadelphia. Each posted $5000 surety on the conspiracy charge.

The indictment, obtained by the War Frauds Unit of the Justice Department, also named Ralph Lamont Glaser, formerly Rhoads' assistant in WPB, and Louis E. Emerman, president of a Chicago machine tool firm, as co-conspirators. Glaser also is charged with making claims for nonofficial traveling.

2 Held in Navy Yard Cafeteria Fund Thefts

In investigation of an apparent shortage in receipts at the Navy Yard cafeteria ended last night with two employes, a white woman and a Negro man, accused in connection with a $720 loss.

They were arrested by two Metropolitan police detectives after Government auditors became aware of irregularities and notified officers of the Naval Intelligence.

The woman, Mrs. Doris Robbins Willis, 22, of 1862 Ontario Road Northwest, was employed as a bookkeeper and cashier, and the man, Theodore Henry Miller, 22, of 762 Nineteenth Street Northeast, was a clerk in the office, it was said.

Claim Records Were Altered

According to Detective Sergts. Watson Salkeld and Louis Wilson, records of receipts were altered and the unrecorded money taken.

It was explained by Salkeld that Miller, in a signed statement, admitted changing numerals on receipt records so that they would show less than the total income. After the records were altered, the detective asserted, the difference in money was appropriated.

The audit, a matter of routine, was made by Government investigators to determine the proceeds due under an agreement which nets 2½ per cent of the gross receipts to a military fund.

Ira Gullickson, police handwriting expert, also examined the records and identified six altered accounts, it was said. His evidence, Salkeld stated, led to a complete confession by Miller.

Woman Denies Implication

The woman, the detectives said, denied knowledge of the missing funds.

She, however, was charged last night with embezzlement of $200 on July 21 and Miller was accused of grand larceny involving the same amount on the same day.

Five other cases involving $520 will be presented to the grand jury, the detectives said. The latter offenses occurred during July on the 14, 15, 20, 24 and 28, it was alleged.

Landlord Loses Action Before Bethesda Court

A landlord yesterday lost the first case in the nearby Maryland area testing the rent control law which was heard in the Trial Magistrate's Court in Bethesda, according to Robert Webb, representative of the OPA.

Landlord Lester Cook, 5600 Saratoga Avenue, Chevy Chase, had filed suit in the court, over which Judge Albert E. Brault presides, to recover $25 in back rent he alleged to be due and to get an eviction order against his tenant, William A. Preece, 329 Willard Avenue, Chevy Chase.

Cook contended in his suit that he had signed a lease with Preece calling for a rental of $100 a month for the house. He also contended that Preece had paid the usual $100 in July, after the rents in the Montgomery-Prince Georges area were frozen, but that the tenant had remitted only $75 in August.

He sued for the additional $25 and also for the eviction of the tenant.

Arthur C. Elgin, attorney for the area rent agency, appeared in court representing the agency and Preece. He produced a copy of the original registration of the property as alleged to have been filed by Cook in which the landlord stated that the house in question had rented for $75 a month on January 1, 1941, the rent-freeze date for the area.

Judge Brault ruled that the rent freezing order superseded the terms of the lease so far as the rent was concerned and that Preece could not be compelled to pay more than $75 a month.

He ruled that Cook owed Preece $25 rebate for the rent overpaid in July.

He also ruled against the landlord on the request for an eviction of the tenant.

Concordia Lutherans Elect Officers at Bethesda Meeting

Election of officers for the ensuing year highlighted the sessions of the Concordia Conference of the American Lutheran Church yesterday at Christ Lutheran Church, Bethesda. The Rev. Raymond A. Vogeley, host pastor and retiring conference president, presided.

The conference embraces churches of the denomination in the District, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, New York and North Carolina.

The Rev. W. R. Straehler, New York City, was named president; the Rev. H. E. Schultz, Baltimore, vice president; the Rev. R. Langholtz, Dobbs Ferry, N. Y., secretary-treasurer, and the Rev. Charles Bauer, Baltimore, chaplain.

Dr. W. E. Schuette, Sewickley, Pa., president of the Eastern district of the American Lutheran Church, led last night's sessions. Thirty-five clergymen were among the participants.

Earlier in the day Dr. H. C. Leupold continued his series of discussions on "The Spiritual Life of the Prophets." He is professor of Old Testament theology at Capital University Theological Seminary, Columbus, Ohio.

This year's meetings of the Concordia Conference are following the retreat type program used successfully at Major Bowes' retreat in Westchester County, N. Y.

Veterans Office Turns in 3334 Pounds of Scrap

A collection of scrap ranging from lawn mowers to war medals and weighing 3334 pounds has been turned in to the Procurement Division of the Treasury Department by the Veteran's Administration, Brig. Gen. Frank T. Hines, Administrator of Veterans Affairs, announced yesterday.

Most of the scrap was brought from home by the employes of the agency, Hines said. The scrap represented that collected from July 2 to August 31.

Personal apparel contributed consisted of rubber raincoats, bathing caps, and rubber shoes. Bottle caps, empty shells and a German helmet also were included in the collection.

A NEW AIR-RAID WARDEN. Paul Howard, new air raid warden in Sector 3, was afraid neighborhood folk wouldn't recognize him. This Volunteer Poster for which he was the model solved the problem. Art by Raymond Bishop; photograph by Dr. S. S. Jaffe

The 'Victory Posters' of Air Raid Sector 3

Neighborhood models for neighborhood posters to explain neighborhood problems arising out of a world-wide war—put them all together and you get "Volunteer Posters."

That's the name chosen by about a dozen photographers and artists in Washington to describe the posters they are making for "the store around the corner and the gas station down the block." With rare exceptions, no two posters are the same.

Their first big project grew out of a pile of sand for fire bomb protection, dumped in a borrowed space about two months ago. The sand had to go—and soon. A hurry call went out from the air-warden of the sector to Paul Bissell, 3528 O Street, author and mainspring of Volunteer Posters. The problem was how to get housewives in the neighborhood to bring their buckets on the run.

Two photographers went on the job one Sunday morning. Girls, enlisted men and children of the neighborhood posed as models. By Monday morning 10 photo prints were finished. That night artists turned the photos into posters, and by 9 a. m. Tuesday, 10 posters, each of different design, were on display in eight stores and two public centers of the neighborhood. The sand was moved that day.

The OCD job served as a nice introduction to the storekeepers, who had suggestions ready for other posters when the artists came round to pick up their first efforts. Then came gas rationing. Time was short, but 14 posters were ready for display in the high school when registration was ordered.

Gas station attendants were questioned next and when possible the attendant posed for the poster on his individual problem. A familiar face on the poster aroused questions, brought the point home to recalcitrant motorists with added punch. Since then requests have come in from Red Cross, OPA and OCD. Scrap rubber—grease—and other campaigns could use posters.

Volunteer posters is designed to supplement the vast poster material of the Government, Bissell said yesterday. The Government output must be geared nationally; V. P. concentrates on the "home block"—at present mostly Air Raid Sector 3, bounded by Wisconsin Avenue, O, Thirty-first and N Streets.

The artists supply their own materials. They censor their own work—or storekeepers do so for them by refusing an occasional design which misses the point.

Every poster must be signed. If a photographer has an idea on how he wants a finished poster, the artist gets two prints. One is finished in line with the photographer's conception, the other according to the artist's wishes.

Volunteer Posters' list of artists and photographers includes a number employed by the Government in art or photo work. But the work they do for V. P. I. is on their own—after hours. Photographers include Dr. S. S. Jaffe, dentist, 407 Dorsett Avenue, Somerset, Md.; Malcolm E. Campbell, 1432 Forty-fourth Street Northwest; James T. Mitchell, Buckingham Village, Va.; Roy Sapp, 2 Eighth Street Northeast, and Lewis B. Olmstead, Congress Heights.

The artists are Herbert Konwiser, Chevy Chase, Md.; Raymond Bishop, 2810 Courtland Place Northwest; C. E. Margraff, 429 Newton Street Northwest; Melvin D. Buckner, 617 Princeton Place Northwest; Richard Stewart, 9512 Old Bladensburg Road, Silver Spring; Richard O'Donahue, 1318 South Clifton Terrace Northwest; David Flax, 4805 Fourth Street Northwest; Bob Williams, 1010 Kenyon Street Northwest; Milton R. Tinsley, 1608 East-West Highway, Silver Spring, and Grillett Scoular, 7607 Twelfth Street Northwest.

HOME TALENT. They may look professional, but the models for this Volunteer Poster are two young ladies who live down the block from Paul Bissell—Sandy Fasnacht and Judy Pickett. Roy E. Sapp made the photograph for this one. Bob Williams did the art work

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS. No national appeal here, but this poster got the residents of Air Raid Sector 3 to bring their buckets and carry away two loads of "fire bomb sand" in double quick time. Volunteer Poster's Paul Bissell, 3523 Street, was both artist and photographer for this one

VOLUNTEERS ALL. There are two girls' schools in the neighborhood for which this poster asking for nurses was designed. Volunteers who contributed to making this poster were Lois Cremins and Bob Devalle, the models; Herbert Konwiser, the artist, and Dr. S. S. Jaffe, the photographer

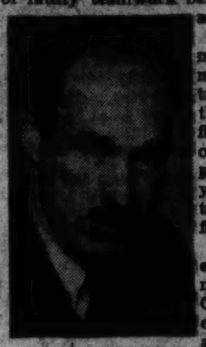
Army Correlation Lacking

THE TRUMAN COMMITTEE hasn't issued a report on it yet, but when some of its members investigated New England war installations they got a striking illustration of faulty teamwork between different branches of the armed forces.



DREW PEARSON

Maj. Gen. Sherman Miles, commander of the First Service Command with headquarters at Boston, traveled with them. At one point they came across a Cavalry outfit riding in jeeps. They were operating in General Miles' area, presumably under his command, yet he had not known they were there. The War Department had failed to notify him.

Traveling farther south, General Miles and the Truman Committee bumped into a Signal Corps company engaged in interceptor work—listening for enemy airplanes. Again, General Miles did not know they were in his corps area.

At a certain airfield, a member of the committee asked the commanding Air Corps colonel what he would do if a Nazi submarine were sighted in the bay—as had happened not long before.

"Well," said the colonel, "I'd run out and catch the commander of a squadron and try to persuade him to fly out over the bay and bomb the submarine."

The colonel was not as dumb as he sounded. For he had no command over bomber squadrons on his field. They are sent from other points for practice training for a few weeks at a time, and there appears to be little or no correlation between different commanders even when they belong to the Air Corps. This may account for such incidents as when a submarine appeared within sight of shore at Jacksonville, Fla., and no airplane flew overhead for four hours, even though Army and Navy bases were a few minutes distant.

NOTE: There is a notable improvement in cooperation between men at the top of the armed forces, but still a lot to be learned by those lower down.

Patient Public Relations

The Army is on the firing line in more ways than one. Col. F. V. Fitzgerald works from 8 a. m. until 7 p. m. in War Department's Bureau of Public Relations. At night he tries to sleep, sometimes without success.

At 2 o'clock one morning he was roused by a phone call from a local news desk. The colonel supposed it was nothing less than the opening of a second front.

"Colonel," said a voice at the other end. "Could you tell us the name of the Chief of Staff?"

"George C. Marshall," was Fitzgerald's patient reply.

"That's what I thought" said the newsman. "We would have called our own military expert, but he's probably asleep."

Capital Chaff

The Navy has wisely drafted some of J. Edgar Hoover's FBI sleuths to help train Naval Intelligence officers. They are doing a bang-up job . . . The Truman Committee has persuaded the Army to lend it Brig. Gen. Frank Lowe, a Maine Republican, as its executive officer . . . The New York publisher to whom Cordell Hull refused to give a war job because he had signed a petition criticizing the State Department for sending scrap iron to Japan is Cass Canfield, president of Harpers . . . On her way from Hollywood to Washington to participate in the Treasury's big bond show, demure Ann Rutherford sold several hundred dollars worth of bonds at each station stop. At Albuquerque one man handed her $1000 in cash.

Gasoline Rationing

GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS dealing with the problem of mileage rationing have eagerly awaited reports of the first month's gas rationing in the Eastern area. These reports are now in, and, although not yet made public, here are the official findings:

The goal was a 50 per cent reduction in the consumption of gasoline. This goal not only has been reached but has been passed.

One oil company with 108 gasoline stations reported that sales dropped more than 80 per cent from the same period last year. Checks made at certain strategic points, such as the Hudson Tunnel, have indicated a similar reduction in traffic.

Furthermore it looks as if by September 21, when the first two-month period ends, the rate of reduction will be even greater, since many people have not carefully budgeted their use of gasoline and now find themselves with only one or two coupons left.

From the Nation-wide point of view this finding means that gasoline rationing is feasible, and has strengthened the advocacy of rationing for the entire country—to save tires.

Harriman Vs. Stalin

WHEN AVERELL HARRIMAN and Joseph Stalin sat down at the same conference table in Moscow last month they charted ways of defending an area over which they once fought.

For the Caucasus contains not only oil but some of the finest manganese deposits in the world, and Harriman once had a lease to develop them. The lease was given to him by the Soviet Government, and Harriman spent several million dollars on transportation facilities to export the ore from the Caucasus.

Then the Soviet expropriated the property and for years Harriman haggled over a settlement. Now he is helping defend it from the Nazis.

Note: If Hitler gets into the heart of the Caucasus he will find primitive mountain tribes so completely separated from civilization that they still wear coats of mail and carry spears in battle.

ADM. GHORMLEY

War Flashes

FRANK GRILLO, president of the United Rubber Workers, is one man who doesn't believe that labor leaders at home are more necessary than fighters at the front. He has resigned from the Rubber Workers and asked for his old jab back in the Army—not a cellophane commission. He wants to be a sergeant. Only 30,000 to 40,000 men face each other in the narrow strip of desert which forms the battlefield of Egypt. About 200,000 or 300,000 men are on each side behind the lines, but the battle there is small compared with some six million men fighting along at 1500-mile front in Russia. . . . Most people think of ships actually sunk as the chief casualty in a naval battle. But one danger to the United States fleet in the South Pacific lies in ships damaged. Some of Admiral Ghormley's ships naturally have been hit, and sometimes it takes three to four weeks to send a ship to Pearl Harbor, or longer if to California, for repairs. For the time being, a ship damaged is as bad as a ship sunk, especially when it takes time to get replacements.

Cleaner Restaurants

The efforts of District food inspectors to clean up the filth which has settled on Washington food counters and tables since the war began should be backed up stanchly by the courts. The inspection staff, now being enlarged to its authorized limit of 26, has already made headway in enforcement over last year, when the Health Department was allotted only eight inspectors to watch over the city's 2000 licensed restaurants. Twenty-two proprietors of such establishments have been convicted since June 15 and more than that number of cases are awaiting disposition in the courts. Most of the arrests were made for use of unsterilized glasses, but the inspectors are also on the lookout for unclean uniforms, employes in poor health, improper handling of food, and numerous other insanitary conditions outlined by the new code governing operation of public eating places and boarding houses.

Overcrowding in Washington is chiefly responsible for the trend toward uncleanliness. With competition no issue in the serving of food, some restaurateurs have grown lax. The difficulty of obtaining trained employes also complicates the problem. Vigorous enforcement of the law is nevertheless essential to prevent mass food poisoning and much more frequent cases of individual illness traced to insanitary handling of food. Now that the Health Department is equipped with a modern code, an increased inspection staff, and facilities to educate first offenders at regular morning lectures, the courts should feel no compunction about making the punishment fit the crime.

G. I. Lexicography

We have been hearing so much about the Army's famous aptitude tests that when a book devoted to that subject turned up the other day we examined it with no little curiosity. The book is called "Practice for the Army Tests," and seems to have been published as a commercial enterprise and to be in no way official. Apparently it is intended as a kind of concentrated cramming course for the more ambitious of prospective recruits. Somewhere in the introduction it is stated that the book is "based upon statements of authorized Government spokesmen and upon articles that have appeared recently in popular and scientific periodicals." The book also contains what are said to be "specimen questions reproduced from previous examinations."

We did not have time to get beyond the vocabulary test to which some 16 pages in the forepart of the book are devoted. Here it is stated that vocabulary tests are "one of the most important single means of testing intelligence" and that "it is not surprising that the Army should lean so heavily in selecting men whose general intelligence is high." To help him into this category the student is told to study certain etymological stems and a "word list" with definitions from which we cite the following:

Cloister: a cell in a monastery.

Cockle: a young cock.

Credulous: a person who is easily convinced.

Discursive: speaking a great deal.

Eclat: a burst of applause.

Gourmand: one who eats well and enjoys what he eats.

Hectic: exciting, feverish.

Redoubtable: dreadful, inspiring fear.

However, these seem not to be the official Army definitions, but merely a sort of personal quarrel between the editors of the book and the lexicographers. Evidently the student should be advised that he follows them at his own risk. For when one turns to the "actual questions" one discovers that the G. I. synonym for "cloister" is apparently "convent" and for "cockle" "shell." Now it is interesting that in these two instances the Army is following a secondary and rather loose usage. Strictly speaking, a cloister is not a convent, but merely a part of a convent—that is to say, the covered walk or arcade around the central quadrangle; there may be, and in fact are, cloisters without convents and convents without cloisters. Similarly, the shell is only part of the cockle. Words, indeed, are traps for examiners as well as examinees; indeed, for all of us.

Anniversary

The outstanding fact on the third anniversary of the British declaration of war against Hitlerite Germany is that there is not an iota of evidence that the British are war-weary. They mean to go on with this war till they have laid the enemy low. We need have no fear of a negotiated peace from the men and women of Britain's breed, no matter what enticements are brought to bear upon the British, no matter how many tribulations have to be endured. Britain is in this war to the end. That has never ceased to be the case since the war declaration. In the 12 months that the British and their partners in the Commonwealth stood alone between Dunkirk and Hitler's declaration of war on Russia, the British were neither more nor less serene in their faith, neither more nor less indomitable in their courage, than when they had the French at their side or when they found themselves members of a vast coalition of 26 United Nations. It was the same to them whether they were in a great solitude or a great multitude.

The characteristic which impels the British to hold on is so indefinable that most people take refuge in telling stories about it. The history of the last three years is rich in such stories. Remember those children on the refugee ship Arandora Star which went down in the North Atlantic with the children singing "Roll Out the Barrel!"? Or the men and women on a torpedoed ship in the Channel who were flung into an oil-laden sea still singing "There'll Always Be an England"? Of all the peoples of this earth, said Emerson, the British stand firmest in their shoes. How firm they stood when France fell, and Hitler waited in Paris for the inevitable surrender! As Edward R. Murrow, Columbia's broadcaster, walked that day in Piccadilly, he overheard a woman shopper say to another, "Too bad about France, isn't it?"

Yet by all the rules Britain had been defeated. Again defeat was written in the skies in the succeeding Battle of Britain, and Goering, in rueful contemplation of the great offensive by his Luftwaffe, exclaimed, "Britain is beaten, but doesn't know it." Of course, the British didn't know it. At the time that Goering was waiting for the British to cave in, American correspondents in Britain were noting the imperturbability of the golf club in posting the rules that the position of delayed-action bombs would be marked by red flags at a reasonably safe distance and that a ball removed by enemy action might be replaced without penalty. Nor did the war interfere in the slightest with the old customs of that Christmastide. Many parts of London looked like the ruins of Pompeii, but the royal Christmas card bore a photograph of the King and Queen looking at the damage Hitler had done to Buckingham Palace. To the American the card seemed like a gesture of subtle derision, but, whatever it was, it remains a companion piece with the other stories in the immortal legends of fighting Britain.

This all adds up to a picture of incomparable morale. But the British themselves would not use that word by way of explanation. According to Mr. Wookey, the captain of a coastwise trawler, in the play of that name, morale is a nasty French word, and his fellow countrymen would agree. American visitors always seek to find an equivalent in English. When Undersecretary James V. Forrestal came back from a visit to war-torn Britain, he said that the quality was "courage with grace." If one word might take the place of these three, perhaps it would be the English word "stickability." These people will remain four-square because of their sublime faith in themselves. Against this moral force not all of Hitler's deviltry can make a dent. On the contrary, the effect is just the reverse, for the moral unity of Britain has found a new cement in this war, and the country is witnessing a spiritual resurgence not seen since Elizabeth's time. Hitler, in the last series of bombings of Britain, thought he had found an Achilles Heel when he attempted to destroy the stately cathedrals of England. What a misreading of the English character! The cathedrals, like the factories, are merely sticks and stones to the British, and even as precious symbols of the English civilization, have not anything like the Englishry of the unofficial rose in the hedgerow.

So, on this third anniversary, the British keep their eyes fixed on a victorious future. Both Mr. and Mrs. Miniver will see it through. And the Germans know it. The Frankfurter Zeitung said recently, "Our central problem is Britain's will-to-war, and it can be broken only by overwhelming physical compulsion." Deep in their hearts, in point of fact, the Germans have always known it. For in Hitler's Mein Kampf we find these prophetic words: "The British nation will therefore be considered as the most valuable ally in the world so long as it can be counted upon to show that tenacity in its government as well as in the spirit of the broad masses which enables it to carry through to victory any struggle that it once enters upon no matter how long such a struggle may last or however great sacrifices may be necessary, and all this even though actual military equipment at hand may be utterly inadequate when compared with that of other nations."

This will-to-war and this will-to-win are, to repeat, the outstanding facts about this third anniversary. We in this country will dwell upon them not only by way of honoring a gallant people, but also because, looked at with the cold-bloodedness of the strategist, Britain's "precious isle" is a vast aircraft carrier for the United States in its war with Hitlerite Germany—an aircraft carrier which, moreover, is a hive of industry. It is our first bastion in carrying this war to a victorious end. It must, therefore, be the first concern in our offensive strategy.

Withholding Judgment

The Navy's latest report on submarine sinkings in the western Atlantic is, on the face of it, most encouraging. During August there were apparently less than half as many sinkings as in any of the preceding three months. This improvement was due in part, of course, to the greater protection afforded shipping. But it is worth noting that the Navy is not disposed to make any optimistic predictions whatever about the Battle of the Atlantic in the months ahead. Some of its reticence is undoubtedly due to the invalidation of official optimism in past months by mounting losses.

But much of the Navy's present reticence stems from the recognition that we are not yet in a position to assay the submarine menace with any degree of accuracy. There are too many uncertain factors. Enemy operations may be only temporarily concentrated elsewhere. Sinkings in the late summer of 1940 and 1941, for example, fell off sharply for a variety of reasons. In this connection it is well established that the long nights of summer are unfavorable to submarine operations. Whatever the combination of reasons for lessened submarine activity in North American waters, there is no indication that the toll of submarines sunk by surface and air units of the Atlantic Patrol is substantial enough to cripple enemy undersea strength. Indeed, though the R. A. F. has done what it could to destroy enemy submarines under construction, it is only sensible for us to figure on a replacement rate that may still be relatively high. Meanwhile, as Admiral King has pointed out, the Navy needs right now more small patrol craft to combat the U-boat menace than can possibly be delivered in the near future.

Any of these uncertainties is capable of making our showing this fall less impressive than the August record might seem to imply. Moreover, lest that record of announced sinkings be taken as an absolute index of our losses, let it be remembered that for reasons best known to itself the Navy frequently withholds the announcement of some sinkings for many weeks. Thus, in the last day or two, we have learned of shipping losses suffered in April and June. It follows, therefore, that along about November we may discover that August losses were greater than at first reported.

Distinguished Service

Washington, and, indeed, the whole country, will be sorry to hear of the impending return to Chungking of Dr. Hu Shih, China's Ambassador here for the past four years. His friends and admirers are legion. And well they might be, for his job has been difficult, his achievements considerable, his personal charm and humility exceptional. Dr. Hu came here with an established reputation as one of the great men of letters of this generation. In the course of his official duties he accumulated more academic honors than have ever been bestowed on any other envoy. But such distinctions have long been an old story to the man who is known as the Chaucer of China. From the start of his work here what he wanted more than anything else was to serve his embattled country to the best of his ability.

To this end he traveled incessantly and lectured to hundreds of audiences from coast to coast. It was a physically exhausting, and, on many occasions, we dare say, a thankless task. Yet Dr. Hu has contributed in very great measure to this Nation's awakening appreciation of the many problems, cultural as well as military, which confront our great ally. He has seen widespread American apathy turn to interest and then to trickling support of China's war effort. In Chungking Dr. Hu will be invaluable as an interpreter of developments over here, and we can think of no better way to speed him on his way than to assure him of American determination to turn that trickling support into a roaring current.

LETTER TO AN ISLAND . . .

Those things of yours that Time can touch,
I put them all away:
The letters that you wrote about
The things you could not say.

But I will keep locked in my heart
Your hair, bright in the sun:
The memory of your careless coat
Thrown down when day was done.

I'll never see the storm clouds drive
Across the darkening sky
Except I'll see you laughing back
At lightning, blatted, high.

That part of you Time cannot take
I carry like a flag.
Oh, do not notice, if at times
My footsteps seem to lag . . .

Mechanics' Complaint

May I add one more gripe to the long list of complaints that the people have these days?

Why do newspapers insist on calling aviation mechanics "grease monkeys?" Refer to your paper of August 31, to the picture page.

We mechanics bitterly resent the tendency of movie writers, story writers and reporters to get patronizing and "informed" in the manner in which they write about us. Why is it that whenever the subject of pilots and mechanics is brought up the mechanic is always considered as some kind of a clown or foil for the majestic aviator? We see it in the movies, photo magazines and in reports in the papers continually.

As for myself—and I believe I am speaking for the rest of the gang—I do not consider myself "a lowly mechanic" nor a stooge for some heroic pilot.

I have been at the trade for 11 years; I have spent thousands of dollars for special schooling, expensive tools and textbooks in order to fit myself for the right to hold a Department of Commerce Aviation Mechanic's certificate, which, by the way, is as hard to acquire as the license of a doctor or a lawyer. We are constantly keeping ahead of the latest developments in the industry and, in general, are "on our toes." Most of us are married, raise families and a minimum of hell and, in general, are respected members of our communities.

Why can't the papers report us favorably? Right now we are doing a pretty good-size job. We can get along without being used as a comical comparison for some begoggled young punk in a hot airplane.

Labor Opportanists

Since that bloody Sunday morn at Pearl Harbor the so-called labor leaders have presumed a new role for themselves. In their estimation they have become the generals of the so-called army of the production line. By high-pressure methods they almost convinced the people that they were winning the war with production. Yet strikes and slowdowns continue and we are far from the goal in weapons manufacturing.

In the Army of the United States no man dares shirk his duty. Wars today are not won by unions and speeches, but by blood and sweat and tears. When we of the Army answered the President's call to defend the Republic, we gave up every comfort for the Nation we love. What have the radical labor groups given up? To them the war is just a good opportunity to press for wage increases.

In 1943, our leaders have told us, we will invade the dark continent of Europe. Will the Nation back us up? Or will the Leftists try so hard to save one-third of the Nation that all will go the way of France?

Give us the tools and we will do the job. DAN'L MUSGRAVE.

Upholding Democracy

In our participation in the war it would seem a point of wisdom that we uphold in every detail the fundamentals of democracy. If we do not do that, how can we expect the other people of the world, even our Allies, either to have faith in us or respect for our way of life when the time comes for making the peace?

I know this. I cannot have faith in those who preach liberty, equality and justice but practice otherwise. And surely I couldn't expect the other fellow to have faith in something in which I have no faith myself. J. J. SPERRY.

In Brazil

The splendid articles on Latin-American countries by Virginia Prewett in your paper have been read with interest by me, especially due to the fact that she does not shy at the burning war question. However, referring to the article on Brazil in this morning's Post, I would take issue with Miss Prewett when she minimizes the chances of a Fifth Column uprising in south Brazil, though I can only hope that she is right.

She mentions a very low estimate of 10,000 trained shock troops that could be put in line by the Germans, and buttresses this low estimate on the presumed impossibility of successfully hiding airplanes and tanks. One million Germans are mentioned. Besides, the first generation descendants should be taken into consideration. No doubt the Germans of south Brazil are counting on surprise a la Japanese to wrest heavy armaments from the Brazilian army. They would deliver "cuantelazo" (the sudden taking at night of barracks and air fields) simultaneously in all south Brazil and probably in Uruguay.

But call them trained shock troops or just plain Nazis, Japs and Italians, I would place the bored-in forces at nearer 50,000 than the estimated 10,000. However, I would like to hear from others on the subject. Let us have more light before any probable uprising. I would go further: the Pan-American nations should hold a grand maneuver, a dress rehearsal, as it were, in this doubtful territory. Let us see what we can muster in defense of the Americas. H. L. GUEYDAN.

Tribute To The Flag

From the pages of an old scrapbook I find the following tribute to the flag:

"I have seen the glories of art and architecture and of river and mountain. I have seen the sunset on the Jungfrau and the moon rise over Mount Blanc. But the fairest vision on which these eyes ever rested was the flag of my country in a foreign port. Beautiful as a flower to those who love it, terrible as a meteor to those who hate it, it is the symbol of power and the glory and honor of 50 millions of Americans."

The author of the above lines, in my estimation, should have a place in literature, even if they were the only ones that were ever published.

Our flag is in grave danger now, which places everything it stands for in the balance. I. N. ELSEA.

Attack On Crocker

I protest against the unfair editorial attack on Mr. Edward Savage Crocker and the career Diplomatic Service in your issue of August 29. Mr. Crocker is an able and conscientious public servant and you have done him a gratuitous injustice, one that could be construed as inspired by malevolence.

So Shall They Reap

A number of newspapers and columnists have been preaching to the voters that an isolationist position by a Congressman or Senator before the Pearl Harbor attack should not be held against him in the coming election. I disagree vigorously. Those who feel as I do question not the patriotism but the judgment of the isolationists, especially their judgment regarding the type of peace which we will have to make when and if we win.

Isolationists did not believe that the destruction of democracy throughout the rest of the world by Nazi and Fascist dictators was any threat to our democracy. Isolationists did not believe that the aggression against one nation after another by the Axis powers was a threat to our peace and security. Isolationists did not believe that Nazi racial vaingloriousness was a threat to our American ideals of equal rights for all regardless of race, creed or color. (Our practice in interracial relations often falls short of our ideals; nevertheless the ideals were a force in the right direction.) Persons who were isolationists before Pearl Harbor obviously are not in favor of a policy of vigorous participation by the United States in the necessary task of organizing the world for peace. Yet, unless we do join with other nations in a policy of collective security which will recognize that aggression against one nation should be treated as an aggression against all nations, to be resisted by the united power of all peace-loving countries, we will lose the peace again as we did after the first World War, even if we completely win the war. Prisoners

The report which Ambassador Joseph C. Grew gives of the character of the "Japanese people" is beyond any comment which would look well in print! It is well The Post published it, so we may have a better idea of the sort of beings we are fighting.

"The atrocities," Grew said, "represented 'the ugly side' of the Japanese people—the cruelty, brutality and utter bestiality, the ruthlessness and rapaciousness of the Japanese military machine which brought on this war."

It is plenty bad enough to become a war prisoner of Japan without adding tortures to it! If conditions are as Mr. Grew states—and I have no idea of differing with him—then we are making a great mistake in taking Japanese "prisoners!" Shoot the "rats" like the worst kind of vermin! Rid our world of the savages that disgrace humanity!

What nation wants to be ruled by bestial savages? Will there come a day of reckoning for Japan? Let us hope so, but it can never undo the agonies which she has forced on her fellows!

More Police Needed

There are a terrific number of criminals in this city, many more than most people imagine. I myself had two large valuable plants stolen off my front steps at noon. I think it is important to protect this home city, especially as it is the Capital of the country. We haven't enough policemen, not nearly enough. Is not this city worth protecting?

The Post Impressionist

Your Crowning Glory

I like Sundays in Washington, even in August. Everybody who gets up at all gets up late, and there is a delightfully restful atmosphere. Just what Sunday should be. In the afternoon I like to jot down my impressions and one of the things that has hit me hardest is the superb quality of your women's hair.

Politeness and good manners are such a feature of American life that I have never understood why your trains and buses are designed to make you turn your backs on each other. In England, which used to be notorious for the frigidity of its people (a condition which life in air-raid shelters and queues has done much to remedy), we sit face to face in the trains.

It now occurs to me that perhaps the reason for your unsociable choice of seating arrangements lies in your wish to admire each other's hair. For there never were such glorious tresses as can be seen in your buses today.

In the event of your being able to choose a seat, an unlikely phenomenon, you now have to decide which hair to sit behind instead of which face to admire while on your journey; although the best-brushed head of hair has not the same facility of changing its expression as a human face, nevertheless it can be a more pleasing companion.

Stand in the front of a bus and you can look back on rows of faces of all types. Lots of pretty faces to be sure, some interesting ones, some lovely, and now and then a face that makes you long for an artist's brush and his skill.

But if you appreciate a woman's crowning glory, stand in the back of the bus and see wave after wave of the hairdresser's art stretching out before you. God gives to women faces that they can improve upon to a limited extent. He gave them hair that in Washington is always a delight.

How do they find the time and where are the artists responsible for these masterpieces? One would think that every second shop in the city would need to be a ladies' hairdresser to cope with the enormous volume of traffic.

All these girls in the buses work all day. Do they sit up all night having their hair put right?

I sometimes wonder if those lions' manes are not very hot. Some are as long and as sumptuous as the wigs worn by our mutual ancestors in Restoration days, and according to Pepys they were very heat-making. But however uncomfortable, the proud owner suffers for our edification, bless her.

How do they avoid suffocation at night? It reminds me of the old problem of whether a man's beard should be worn inside or outside the bedclothes. Is the face worn inside the hair, or is the latter tied to the head of the bed or put in a bag?

I am not going to be so tactless as to ask whether all the colors are natural, but blondes seem out of fashion. Perhaps they are a New York product and you Southerners like to be different. With great difficulty I shall make no allusion to gentlemen in this paragraph.

The hat-making industry must be having a thin time. And hats are cheap. Staggering creations of a few feathers and a bit of fluff given away. I'm surprised the girls don't go and buy a new hat every time they feel depressed. Perhaps they never get depressed and that's why there are so few hats.

I am glad of it, for I prefer the hair uncovered. I wonder what they do when they go to church.

Now flowers are different. There is something about a white flower—or possibly a red one for the Spanish type of hair—that a hat just hasn't. Is it a suspicion of glamorous nights in southern seas? Is it a little theatrical? Whatever the effect, it's good.

I am sure only happy girls put flowers in their hair. Wasn't there a song about it once? That if you are happy I'm happy, too. That's how flowers affect me, anyhow.

Bows come next. I like them, too. I often think that when dressing in a hurry it must need the patience of an angel to get those bows in the right place. Perhaps the bow-tiers are angels? They certainly make them look demure and sweet and years younger than their age.

What about the doodads? Is that the right word for all those bits and pieces that get caught up in some of your hair? Bits of coral, odd junk, and what have you. I don't like them. Put your valuables in the bank or on the parlor mantelpiece, don't wear them, please.

Some of the handsomest women I have seen in Washington had gray hair. There is something very becoming when gray hair has a young and fresh complexion to go with it, especially if the hair is well set up.

But not dragged up on top of your head and pinned and twisted and curled and frizzled into too much artificiality. I much prefer the older fashion of letting it flow down your charming backs. I suppose Hollywood sets the hair fashions. If any of you know any film stars, do ask them to stick to the present fashion for a long, long time.

P. S. Since writing this I have discovered that the girls don't go to hairdressers. They do their own hair. I am lost in admiration.

Moral Unity Attained

By J. H. Boss

The Dutch And Their Queen

QUEEN WILHELMINA, whose birthday occurred Monday, is only the fourth sovereign on the throne of the Netherlands and, apart from those awe-inspiring world events in which she is giving a lead, not unworthy of the immortal example set by the founder of the royal dynasty. She has proved to be the most remarkable of the four crowned rulers of the kingdom. It was only under her rule that moral unity was fully attained and that the crown, after having been a symbol of this ideal for over 300 years, became the expression of a reality. Up to the first years of this century there had been, in spite of the strictly constitutional and impartial attitude of the rulers, many tendencies to embroil the crown in national controversies. Some of the political parties were still inclined to perpetuate the old antithesis between Orangism and formal republicanism. There were parties which practically constituted themselves King's parties, monopolizing loyalty to the crown and the ruler's person and challenging all those who, although no less loyal, did not share their views as to the true consequences of patriotism and loyalism. There was the Social Democratic Party, which for many and many years was anti-royalist without having any fixed principles as to the real merits and virtues of undiluted republicanism. It proved to be very hard to leave the dynasty out of party politics in a country whose past, in spite of its greatness and glory, had been a past of unending party troubles, centering around the stadtholders and the House of Orange.

It is the imperishable glory of the present Queen that during her long reign she inspired her people with that sense of real unity and solidarity without which every nation, but especially a small nation, is doomed to vanish from the surface of the earth. She considered it as her uppermost duty to maintain to its fullest extent the spirit of the constitution of 1813, which had laid the foundation of democracy in the soil of unity under the unifying inspiration of the House of Orange.

A blameless Queen and woman, she towered high above partisan strife; high even above those excesses of byzantine loyalty, professed by those who vainly hope to make crown and dynasty the instruments of their political purposes and ambitions. All her subjects, whatever their political convictions or prejudices, had the same title to her care and devotion. Since the first World War, the last vestige of the old controversies, which—very much against their will—had surrounded the Princes of Orange in the Republic of the United Provinces, vanished, and the constitution of 1815 had become a living reality, the fulfillment perhaps of the great dream of William the Silent, who was a republican of royal blood.

Without Orange No Monarchy

In the development of the relations between the House of Orange and the Netherlands people it has been a most characteristic fact that when in 1918 the constitution was revised, one of the most important and most desired for revisions concerned the succession to the throne. At that time the direct succession was only weakly assured, the Queen having only one daughter, of tender age, so that unhoped for eventuality might place not only the dynasty but the institution of monarchy itself in jeopardy. But to the Dutch, the monarchy as such meant little; loose from the House of Orange, if ever this house were extinguished, it meant nothing, and hence, the relative paragraph of the constitution was altered in such a way that if the last direct descendant of the House of Orange died without heirs and successor, the States General (the Dutch Parliament) were at liberty to decide as to the constitutional future of the nation. Nothing, perhaps, proves more clearly how, after a whole century of monarchy, the Dutch people still identified their fate not with the principle of monarchy, but with the traditions of the House of Orange.

The House of Orange is a constitution in itself, it being deeply rooted in the origins of the Dutch nation, such as it developed from medieval feudalism. But by being a constitution in itself, it is far from being a law in itself. It is the buttress of constitutional democracy, of free and natural development, of national unity. And, considered in the light of Dutch history, which is unlike the history of any other European nation, it is the consolidation of those great republican instincts which, as the soul of liberty, are at the bottom of each great true democracy.

Queen Has Great Personality

Now this Queen, even apart from that great historical duty which was imposed on her as an heiress to the House of Orange, has a great personality which, in spite of the utter limitations of her constitutional powers, has helped to shape the fortunes of the Dutch people. Edward VII once wrote in a letter to one of his brother sovereigns on "le mentier de Rois," which he, no doubt, exercised with the refined perfection of a man of the world. Queen Wilhelmina, on the other hand, is the most illustrious example of a ruler who follows "la vocation de Reine." Her greatest asset, perhaps, is fortitude, the very fortitude which engenders the heroic virtues without which the saints and martyrs would never have risen to the altars, and without which no Queen will rise to the hearts of her people in distress. This awe-inspiring, this almost terrible fortitude which unified a nation in the last quarter of a century to an extent which in the great and mighty past of the Dutch republic could never be achieved, has been a shining example and never ending inspiration in these days of super-human struggle, not merely for winning a war and freeing a country, but for the survival of life itself.

Listen to the Queen's voice; it is the voice of centuries. It is the voice of the great hopes and the great efforts of the past and of the indomitable will of today which, in one great and united inspiration, will combine to produce tomorrow's victory of freedom.

In this Queen's august personality the House of Orange is achieving its crowning task—the task for which William the Silent paid with his precious life when he fought the despotism of Spain; the task which William the Third continued when he opposed the mighty host of despotic France; the task which many a sturdy Dutch wayfarer preached on the inhospitable shores of this New World; the task of building up, stone by stone, cemented by blood and sweat, the glorious commonwealth of human freedom and human dignity.

The Axis On Dieppe

By Selden Menefee

Confusion Shown

THE AXIS radios are still talking about Dieppe, and the more they talk the more they get tied up in their own inconsistencies.

On the number of German planes lost, Berlin first said that "the actual loss was 35." But Rome claimed to its home audience that "the Luftwaffe lost only 17," and Berlin later told Britain that "the number of German fighters lost has decreased after further investigations from 17 to 14."

There was no more agreement on the number of Allied soldiers taking part in the raid. The Italian home radio first said that 10,000 men landed at Dieppe. In a broadcast to the Arabs, however, the same transmitter spoke of "the annihilation of the 20,000 British troops who landed." In a broadcast to Portugal, Rome raised the ante still more: "An entire light division was landed . . . followed by a heavy division which was carried by a whole fleet. This is a whole army."

Raid Called Second Front

The basic Axis propaganda line on Dieppe is that the raid was an attempt to open a second front. But as late as August 17 Berlin had told England that "Churchill decided (in Moscow) that there should be no invasion of Europe this year."

On the day after the raid the German home radio still referred to Dieppe as a "large-scale landing on the French coast." Not until the following day did the Axis radios agree to refer to the raid as a full-fledged "second front."

This line was apparently selected by the Nazi propaganda ministry for two main reasons: (1) To persuade the Allied peoples that a second front had been tried and found impossible, and (2) to reassure the people of Germany and occupied countries. In the latter connection the Nazis themselves have been predicting an attempt at establishing a second front; to convince the people that the first such move had failed, therefore, would probably dash the people's hopes (or fears) of a United Nations invasion.

The German radio termed the attack "another Gallipoli." At the same time the Nazis maintained that the Axis was "grateful for the fact that the first landing attempt was successful." Otherwise the "flawless coordination" of the German defensive forces would never have been put to a test. General Runstedt's inspection of his defenses at Dieppe showed that they were still in perfect condition, said Berlin.

Rome added that the raid enabled Axis forces to examine the British landing tactics. This, too, was meant to convince the people of occupied Europe that no second front can be successfully established.

Effect on French Morale

Fear on the part of the German propagandists that French morale may have been raised by the raid is strikingly shown by the Nazis' use of Paris radio. The French were told on August 23 that the people of Dieppe "remained calm because of indifference to the British raid." The Paris "Aujourd'hui" was quoted as saying, "Far from turning Germans and Frenchmen into enemies, the British Dieppe adventure has increased the understanding between the French and the Germans."

On August 25 a more positive propaganda line was adopted for the benefit of the French. The people of Dieppe were praised for supplying the German soldiers with food and drink and for "fighting conflagrations" started by British bombers. The Fuehrer himself, it was announced on August 25, has decided to release all French war prisoners from Dieppe and neighboring towns, "in view of the attitude shown by the inhabitants of Dieppe." In a broadcast to North America, however, Otto Koischwitz said that "the inhabitants of Dieppe didn't know anything about landing attempts until all was over."

The release of Dieppe prisoners was given a great play by Calais and other Nazi-controlled stations along the invasion coast, to convince the people that they might expect to profit by actively opposing any future commando raid or second-front attempt.

Perhaps the most significant of all Axis comments on the Dieppe raid was made in a German-language broadcast to Europe from the Nazi transmitter at Calais: "Churchill will, and of this we are convinced, make other attempts at invasion."

Among the real lessons of the Dieppe raid are these: (1) The Allies are at last ready to undertake large-scale offensive actions, not only in the Pacific but in Europe. (2) The enemy's strength has been tested, and it is proved possible, with the help of an "umbrella of aircraft," to land a considerable force by daylight on the European coast. (3) The Allies' air power has been demonstrated, and that of Germany on the Atlantic coast has been further depleted by the air battle which accompanied the raid. The Nazis know these things, which may account for their apparent concern over reactions to the raid in Germany and occupied Europe.

Powell On China

By J. B. Powell

Missionaries Heaviest Losers

Former Editor of the China Weekly Review

(LAST OF A SERIES)

There are 1500 Americans interned at Shanghai. The camp is about 5 miles west of the village of Woosung, which is some 12 miles from Shanghai on low land at the point where the Whangpoo River joins the Yangtse. The buildings, of a semi-permanent nature, were constructed secretly by the Japanese military authorities two years ago. The camp is operated on military lines and no one is permitted to visit the area, which is surrounded by a heavy barbed wire fence.

Those who are interned in the Woosung Camp include 630 soldiers, sailors and marines, and 830 civilians. Most of the civilians were employed on defense works on Wake Island. The military contingent consists of marines previously stationed in Tientsin and Peiping and smaller groups of soldiers and sailors from Wake Island and the U. S. S. Wake, river patrol boat captured by the Japanese December 8.

There are also a few Britons in the camp, including the crew of the Petrel, British gunboat which was stationed in Shanghai. The Petrel was blown up and burned by the crew when the Japanese attempted to take over the ship. Also in the Woosung Camp are Sir Mark A. Young, former Governor of Hongkong, and his staff.

Aside from those interned at Woosung and subject to exchange as we have some Japanese military prisoners to trade for them, there are still 1000 or 1200 Americans in Shanghai, many of whom probably will remain there regardless of Washington's wishes. There are also some 2000 Britons at Shanghai, most of whom were scheduled for evacuation during the month of August. The United States Government has never had the power possessed by the British to compel the evacuation of its citizens from dangerous areas.

While American businessmen at Shanghai, Tientsin and elsewhere have suffered heavy losses since 1937, the missionaries have been the chief sufferers. Not only have they suffered heavy personal losses due to the abandonment of their homes scattered over the interior of the country, but also they have been compelled to abandon the work on which they have been engaged for many years. Large hospitals built with American funds have been turned over to the Chinese staff or taken over by the Japanese military.

In many cases persons engaged in research work have had to abandon their files, containing the results of studies extending over a quarter of a century. For example, a doctor at Tsinan, capital of Shantung, was forced to abandon his records containing thousands of specimens. Some time ago, when the Japanese military first occupied Tsinan, the commanding officer inspected the hospital and medical school, discovering several cadavers which had been stored in the basement for dissection by students. The Japanese officer immediately confiscated the bodies and put on a "mass funeral," hoping apparently to impress the Chinese and discredit the medical staff at the school.

Sun Yat Sen's Liver

At Peiping the Japanese military claimed to have found in the course of an inspection of the Peking Union Medical College, the preserved liver of the late Dr. Sun Yat Sen. A story appeared in newspapers in Japanese-occupied territory to the effect that the American doctors had secretly extracted the liver of the late Chinese political leader, who died at the Peking Union Medical College Hospital. Japanese announced they had taken the liver to Nanking and restored it to Dr. Sun's body in the mausoleum. It should be explained that the Chinese are very superstitious about keeping the human body intact at the time of burial; the Japanese object thus was to discredit the medical staff at the hospital, supported by the Rockefeller Foundation.

Of 710 in the missionary group aboard the exchange liner Gripsholm, 35 were doctors and 35 nurses. The missionaries had been stationed in all parts of China, Japan and Korea. Since many were in small villages, the extent of their influence on the masses of the people is difficult to estimate.

There has been a great expansion of American business in China in recent years, but for the last half century the biggest and most important American activity in the Orient has been missionary work. The mission boards in New York and their representatives in China handled large sums of money contributed by the American people. Most missionaries are college graduates, and many are outstanding in their special lines of activity. In recent years the mission boards have sent to China some of the leading scientists in the United States for investigations, with resulting discoveries of great benefit to people at home. Before the Japanese attack on China in 1937 there were about 12 universities and colleges of high standing in various parts of China, most of which were controlled by mission boards.

Owing to unsettled conditions resulting from the war, the number of missionaries in China is not known, but it is larger than the number evacuated. Aboard the Gripsholm 35 denominations and 17 other groups were represented. There were 298 women, 289 men and 123 children. Among the missionaries were 84 Catholic priests and 83 nuns. The largest mission group was the Northern Presbyterian, with 171.

300,000 Londoners Hail Yanks Who Dine Off City's Gold Plate

By William R. Downs

United Press Staff Writer

London, Sept. 2.—American doughboys, in Britain for a "sustained offensive," paraded before 300,000 cheering Londoners today through flag-bedecked streets to the centuries-old Guildhall where Maj. Gen. J. C. H. Lee said the Yanks were here "to give their all-out best to win this war."

And further emphasizing the business at hand during a luncheon for his troops in the Guildhall, Lee, who commands the United States services and supply branch in the European theater, revealed that Lieut. Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, had been prevented from attending by "urgent matters of the greatest importance."

American flags waved from London's fire-scarred spires as United States forcers, including Marines and an infantry band which played "Over There," marched.

On the Strand one gray-haired flower seller picked out her best red roses and threw them one by one to the troops. Thousands of onlookers waved small American flags and one woman jammed in the crowd outside St. Paul's Cathedral said she had been saving her's since 1918.

Many war workers missed their lunches to cheer the Americans and the city's spirit was exemplified by an old lady who approached a soldier and said: "Thank you so much for coming over."

The Marines formed the rear guard and drew the greatest cheers along with Britain's most famous horse race tipster, Ras Monolulu, Jamaican Negro, who marched wearing a feathered turban and carrying American, British, Russian and Palestinian flags.

Guests at the luncheon included Deputy Prime Minister Clement R. Attlee, United States Ambassador John G. Winant, Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden and Labor Minister Ernest Bevin.

The troops were served on the famous gold plate of the City of London, used for the first time since the crews of the cruisers Ajax and Achilles were entertained on their return from the victory over the Graf Spee.

Britons Are Getting Hep

London, Sept. 2 (AP).—Take it from Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden, Britons are getting hep to the American way—"We'll even learn baseball if you give us time."

Speaking at a luncheon tendered American soldiers, Eden said:

"The more Americans and British meet and the more informally they meet, the better."

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

The Marines Do It Again

Tough and grim and ready,
Packers of a punch,
Calm and cool and steady—
What a deadly bunch!
Splashing through the breakers,
Where the jungles stew,
Bettin' (and no takers!)
They will see it through!

II

Leapin' from the barges,
Eager for the fray,
Leadin' in the charges
With a hip hooray!
Stout of heart as Bonz—
Quick as tiger cats,
Showin' up the foe as Small-time scrobats.

III

Tulagi, Gavutu,
Tanambogo Isle,
Each a soft "pakootu"
For their fighting style;
Makin and Makambo . . .
Add 'em to the scenes
That have known the whambo
Of our brave Marines.

IV

Japs dug in and hidden—
Sheltered in the cliffs . . .
Safe? Hey, quit ya kiddin',
Slant-eyed little stiffs!
Think you're high and mighty—
"Hito" told you so;
Back into your nightie!
You won't place or show!

V

Now the Jap planes soar in!
Out to tie the score;
(Just a little borin'—
That and nuthin more.)
Other foes went scrammin' . . .
Hirohito, check ! ! ! !
The one keeps on slammin' . . .
He's a Leatherneck!

VI

Tunnels full of Jappies
In the solid rock . . .
Soon they're all "slap-happies" . . .
How those Yanks can sock!
"Tokyo! Instructions!"
Here's a pretty stew—
"This foe raises ructions—
Don't know when he's through!"

VII

Charley's in a tough spot—
Don't know what to do;
Very, very rough spot . . .
Foe keeps coming through:
No fifth column buddies
No push-over crews! . . .
No old fuddle-duddies
Swillin' up their booze!

L'envoi

Soon the caves are quiet
Held but by the dead;
Tell that to your Diet!
Let the news be read:
"Leathernecks, in action,
Won as in a breeze."
Quite some satisfaction,
You'll excuse it, please.

'Supernational Order'

Argentine Prelate's Peace Formula

Special Dispatch to The Post

Chicago, Sept. 2.—Dr. Miguel de Andrea, titular Bishop of Temnos and director of the Catholic Workers Center in Buenos Aires, Argentina, said here tonight that, if there is to be a peaceful world in the future, nations will have to yield some part of their own sovereignty in order to build the framework of a "supernational society."

This supernational society, he said, would be vested with the necessary powers to become the head of the world community, the supreme and final tribunal for international controversies. In 1919, he said, the peoples of the world were not ready for the League of Nations.

Bishop de Andrea, one of the most distinguished Catholic prelates in Latin America, was recently in Washington for the Inter-American Seminar on Social Studies, held under auspices of the National Catholic Welfare Council. He called on President Roosevelt and gave him the greetings of President Castillo of Argentina and members of the Argentine cabinet. Although it was a busy day at the White House, President Roosevelt talked to the Argentine prelate for a half hour.

At a dinner given by Archbishop Stritch in the Drake Hotel tonight, Bishop de Andrea praised the statement made by President Roosevelt last December when he thanked the Catholic bishops for their vote of loyal assistance. At that time President Roosevelt said:

"We will win this war, and in the victory we shall search, not for vengeance, but for the establishment of an international order, in which the spirit of Christ shall be the norm for the hearts of men and nations."

Bishop de Andrea said tonight that he did not represent Argentina either in a political or ecclesiastic capacity. He said he spoke only as a "humble guest" of the Catholic hierarchy of the United States. In listing his own aspirations for a better world, he listed among the essential principles freedom, justice and democracy.

"I uphold the principle of democracy," he said, "because it is a system of government which normally binds all men of good will to work for the raising of moral and material standards of the people; no other political regime allows the common man such a wide margin of opportunity so that he, too, may share the responsibilities of power.

"In short, the peaceful stability of the world to come demands in the name of humanity that, once and for all time, nations willingly yield some part of their own sovereignty, in order to build the framework of a supernational society, vested with the necessary powers to become the head of the world community, the supreme and final tribunal for international controversies.

"The pact of 1919 was an imperfect experiment. It is not just to blame its authors for its failures. Public opinion in the several nations was not prepared to consent to the relinquishing of certain rights, required by the creation of a perfect supernational society.

"Today things have changed. And if this were not so, it would be necessary to make them change. The experience is enormous. The world's catastrophe is frightful. We do not realize its apocalyptical proportions.

"The vandalistic destructions of the laborious constructive process of centuries and the blood of millions of innocent victims clamor, as in the biblical phrase, to the high heavens. The history of the future would never forgive the men of today if they lack comprehension and courage to do what ought to be done.

"The task consists in conciliating two apparently contradictory tendencies: internationalism and nationalism. We must decide to operate on the vicious extremes of the one and of the other. We must have the courage to condemn individualism wherever it may be found, not only in men but also in nations. And not only in weak nations, but also in strong ones; not only in small ones, but also in great ones.

"To attain our aim we have this formula: That love that each one has for himself should never be employed to the detriment of the love which is due the family; nor should the love which one bears for one's country ever be employed to the detriment of the love of humanity."

Recalling President Roosevelt's statement to the Catholic bishops last December, Bishop de Andrea said that it allowed the world to aspire to a peace "which will not be specifically German, Roman, Saxon or American, but a peace essentially Christian, because only thus will it be comprehensively human."

Rubber Survey Near Completion

The three-man committee appointed August 6 by President Roosevelt and headed by Bernard M. Baruch to make a "quick but adequate" survey of the confusing and critical rubber situation was understood yesterday to be nearing the end of its labors. One report, which could not be confirmed because Mr. Baruch and his fellow committee members, Dr. James B. Conant, president of Harvard University, and Dr. Karl F. Compton, president of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, have adopted a "sealed lips" policy, was that the group would submit its findings and recommendations to the President by Labor Day.

N. Y. Draft Board Puts Squeeze On Spouses Who Hold Out Pay

By the Associated Press

New York, Sept. 2.—Married men who make a practice of tearing open the old pay envelope before taking it home to the little woman are being given another envelope—from their selective service boards—under a scheme worked out by probation authorities in Queens.

When a wife reports to Anton Ess, court probation officer, that the pay envelope has come home too many times with part of its contents missing, Ess takes a record of the man's draft number, classification and his draft board.

If hubby is warned of this, but persists in his tactics, the wife is sent to the Selective Service Board to complain of her husband's failure to support her. Ess follows this up with a letter to the board, recommending the errant husband's reclassification in 1-A.

"It is surprising how quick the wives are to threaten the husbands with 1-A classifications and how quick the husbands are not to see me again," Ess said today.

The probation officer reported that within the last few weeks he had been responsible for the induction of six men in the Army—all of whom had been classified as 3-A, but who had failed to support their wives in accordance with court directions.

Of the man who goes into the Army on the complaint of nonsupport by his wife Ess said today:

"A top sergeant will straighten out that fellow quicker than all the rules and regulations of a probation officer, and at the same time the wife and children will receive regular monthly allotments."

Spy Plotter's Wife To Seek Divorce, Start Life Anew

Buffalo, N. Y., Sept. 2 (AP).—Mrs. Ruth Bahr, 25-year-old wife of Herbert Karl Friedrich Bahr, sentenced to 30 years in Newark for conspiracy to commit espionage, said today she felt "sorry for him, but I never loved him."

"He's gotten himself into plenty of trouble—now he has to pay for it," she added in an interview. "I want to divorce him and start life all over again."

Mrs. Bahr asserted her husband "never supported me or our child, now 3 years old."

"I want to forget it all and I will," she said. "I want to get a job and work until I can get my divorce, marry again and have the kind of home that every real woman wants to have."

Yanks, Bosox Win Two; Borowy Near No-Hitter

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

POVICH

And so Clark Griffith took the $50,000 and got rid of four players Bucky Harris didn't want on the Washington ball team. It was a shrewd bit of unloading by the Washington owner who cashed in heavily and made his manager happier in a series of profitable strokes.

Harris began plotting the disposal of Jack Wilson, Bob Repass, Roy Cullenbine and Buck Newsom as early as last May and one by one he got them off his ball team. Harris had nothing against the fellows personally, except that he didn't like their type. Nor did he care for them collectively. In fact, therein lay Harris' chief gripe—the collective conduct of the quartet.

Shortly after the Nats returned from the South, Harris was shocked to realize that for the first time in his 19 years as a big league manager he had a clique on his ball club. The veterans Newsom and Wilson were showing the rookie Repass the ropes in a manner Harris didn't like. When Cullenbine joined the club from the Browns, the playboys numbered four. Cullenbine fell in easily with Newsom, Wilson and Repass. In fact, Cullenbine could teach his fun-loving pals a few tricks they might have overlooked. He was a character, that Cullenbine.

They Big-Shotted it Around League

The quartet quickly set themselves up as a group apart from the other Nats. They looked down their noses at the hotel fare and sought out the steak and chop houses at their own expense. They big-shotted it all over the circuit. They went into four-man huddles that irked Harris, who has a natural hate for clubhouse lawyers. They didn't seem particularly unhappy when the Nats lost. They had little traffic with the journeyman ball players on the Washington club, and at least one of 'em boasted openly that he was making more money than Harris.

Harris wouldn't have cared so much if they were helping his ball club between the hours of 3 to 5, but they weren't. Newsom was a .379 pitcher-through August. Wilson was ludicrous in his attempts to win a game. Repass was a dismal flop, and Cullenbine couldn't get up a gallop with the bat. They weren't delivering for Harris, who began putting them on his list early in June.

The first man he rooted out was Wilson. When Clark Griffith told Harris that the Tigers were bidding for Wilson, the Nats' manager told his boss to let the Tigers have him before they changed their mind. It was to be a deal of Wilson for Eric McNair, but when McNair failed to report, it threatened to fall through. The Tigers wouldn't take Wilson for the $7500 waiver price. Harris persuaded Griffith to cut the price down, and the sale was made.

Okayed Cullenbine, Repass Deals

Every morning, Harris tramps up the steps of Griffith's little stucco office to talk matters over with the Nats' owner, and in those conferences Harris next made it plain that he didn't want Repass on his ball team any longer. Did Griffith have any offers for Repass? Told that the Orioles would take him for the $7500 waiver price, Harris said it would be good riddance. That's what the Nats paid for Repass, $7500, and they broke even on the deal.

With a fair start toward breaking up the clique, Harris next went to work on Cullenbine. Why not ask waivers on him? Griffith did, and when the Yankees claimed him Harris whooped for joy. Griff could get $7500 out of the deal and Harris would be rid of another of his playboys. Thus that deal was swung.

Newsom was next. Long before Harris had made it plain to Griffith that Newsom was no great help to the Nats. Once when Newsom had lost four games in a row, Harris made the crack that Dutch Leonard with a broken leg was more valuable to the club than Newsom in good health. At least Leonard wasn't pitching losing ball. He pointed out to Griffith that Newsom had not proved the great gate attraction Griffith had fancied him to be.

Newsom was Managerial Headache

It would have been all right with Harris if Griffith had sold Newsom to Brooklyn in June, when they made a fancy offer for him. In fact, Harris had been none too keen about buying Newsom from the Tigers in the first place, back in March. Griffith, with his great predilection for showmanship, had been willing then to buy Newsom and pay him a big salary. Harris simply took what he was given to work with. When the Dodgers renewed their offer for Newsom the other day, Harris saw a chance to get rid of a losing pitcher and a managerial headache at the same stroke. The size of Brooklyn's offer for Newsom made it the easier for Harris. Griffith couldn't turn down that kind of money and Harris was thankful to see Newsom go the way of Wilson, Repass and Cullenbine—off the Washington club.

The step-by-step sale of the four ball players netted Griffith a tidy sum of at least 50,000. If there is no baseball next year, it is all clear profit. And actually he didn't give up much. Griffith is perhaps more to be praised than censured. The Washington ball club as it was constituted during most of the season wasn't very popular with Washington fans. Any sort of revamping will probably be for the better.

Williams Hero; Tigers Bow, 3-2, 4-2

Outfielder Knocks In 4 Runs, Raises Season's Total To 121; Also Homers

By the Associated Press

Boston, Sept. 2.—Ted Williams' thumping bat kept the Boston Red Sox firmly on the victory path today as they swept a double-header from Detroit, 3 to 2, and 4 to 2, stretching their month-long spurt to 22 victories in last 26 games.

Williams blasted across four runs in teh twin bill—all of them important—and raised his runs-batted-in to 121, far ahead of the rest of the field.

He came up in the eighth inning of the opener with the Red Sox trailing Al Benton and the Tigers, 2 to 1. Williams whacked the first pitch into the right field stands for his twenty-eighth home run, tying the score—and with that inspiration Boston won out in the ninth.

Bobby Doerr doubled, Jim Tabor sacrificed him to third, and both Johnny Peacock and pinch-hitter Joe Cronin were passed intentionally, filling the bases. Dom DiMaggio popped out, but Johnny Pesky singled Doerr home with the run that gave Charley Wagner his thirteenth victory.

Williams' bat contributed again in the seventh inning of a night-cap pitching duel between Joe Dobson and Hal White. The Sox had a slim 1-to-0 lead when Ted doubled off the left field fence, driving in three runs that proved necessary.

Dobson, gaining his tenth victory, had pitched 25 consecutive scoreless innings when Detroit scored one run in the eighth. In the ninth, pinch-hitter Rip Radcliff doubled and scored on two infield outs. Then, after Murray Franklin singled, Tom Judd replaced Dobson and retired Rog Cramer on an infield grounder.

Plebes Made Eligible for Navy Varsity

Rule Limiting Varsity Playing To Three Years Maintained, However

By the Associated Press

Annapolis, Md., Sept. 2.—Navy's 1942 varsity football squad, hard-pressed for veteran material and practicing on a skimpy hour-a-day schedule, tomorrow will open its ranks to plebes for the first tmie in 19 years.

Under the United States Naval Academy's accelrated wartime program, only two classes had been eligible for the team. The freshman rule, to be set aside during the time the academy operated on its present three-year basis, was adopted in August, 1923.

Before that time, fourth classmen could play in varsity intercollegiate contests.

Comdr. L. S. Perry, U. S. N., academy director of athletics, announced today that "in order to accord three years of varsity competition to all midshipmen qualified," the Navy Athletic Association executive committee had recommended abolishing the freshman rule.

He said the committee had recommended also that the rule "limiting varsity competition to a total of three years be maintained," and that "separate freshman squads and schedules be maintained."

Perry said Rear Admiral John R. Beardall, academy superintendent, had approved the recommendations and the new regulations would become effective tomorrow.

"This is in conformity with the majority of colleges in the New England and Middle Atlantic States which are now operating on the three-year basis," he added.

Comdr. John E. Whelchel, Navy's new head football coach, said he didn't ..now whether any plebes would make the team or not.

Dubious Hit Spoils Game For Rookie

Keller's Home Run Beats St. Louis In Opener, 3 to 2; Yanks Then Win, 6-0

By the Associated Press

New York, Sept. 2.—The New York Yankees provided two big thrills for a midweek crowd of 28,872 today while sweeping a doubleheader from the St. Louis Browns—but at the end the spectators learned one of the sensations was simply an illusion.

Charley Keller brought the fans to their feet with his twenty-fifth home run after two were out in the tenth inning of the first game and gave the world champions a 3 to 2 decision.

Then Rookie Hank Borowy mowed down the Browns 6 to 0 in the second game while many in the crowd thought they were seeing a no hitter.

Actually a smash by Harlond Clift that glanced off Second Baseman Joe Gordon's glove in the first inning was scored as a single, but the scoreboard at Yankee Stadium does not show whether plays are hits or errors, contrary to the custom at most major league parks, and as the Brownies fell back one by one through the remainder of the contest the fans felt certain they were sitting in on an historic event.

After the final out they poured onto the field shouting jubilantly only to turn their cheers to boos when the St. Louis totals 0—1—2 were posted on the big scoreboard.

Even though it was only a one-hitter, it was Borowy's thirteenth victory against three setbacks, his fourth shutout, and the Yankees' eighteenth of the season equalling a club record set by the 1909 New York Americans, then called the Highlanders.

G. W. Eleven To Concentrate On Air Game

On the basis of the first two days' drills, passing will play a major part in George Washington University's offensive this football season. Head Coach Johnny Baker yesterday spent the greater portion of both practice sessions working with his "pitchers."

"You've got to throw plenty these days in football and we're going to do it," Baker said firmly. Don Pinnow, Jim Graham, Tony Creme and Frank Seno will bear the burden of the Colonials' aerial game, with Johnny Pollock, Paul Weber, Ed Czekaj and Jim Hahon doing most of the receiving.

Pinnow, brightest freshman prospect the Colonials have turned up in many years when he entered the university in 1939, appears to be in the best shape of his career and certainly expects to produce all that has been hoped for him since his frosh season. He is an effective passer at all distances, but his specialty is the long-range heave. Yesterday he was hitting his receivers with consistency up to 40 yards.

Mels' Boxing Set Tomorrow

The Twelfth Street Y. M. C. A. mittmen will play host to the "Mighty" Mels Boxing Club of Southeast Washington tomorrow night. The entire proceeds will go to buy a wheel chair for Melvin Stevenson, coach of the Mighty Mels who is afflicted with rheumatory arthritis and has not been able to walk for several years.

Light fast bouts are on the card which promises some of the best amateur talent. The match starts at 8 p. m. at the Y. M. C. A., 1816 Twelfth Street Northwest

Washington Flour Plays Fort Stevens for Title

Washington Flour and Fort Stevens will play a doubleheader Sunday for the junior title of the National City League on East Ellipse at 1:30. If a third game is necessary it will be played the following Sunday.

Boyle's Bar will attempt to clinch Section B honors in the unlimited division when they play Victory Club at 10:30 a. m. on South Ellipse. Boyle beat Victory last Sunday in the first of the play-off games.

'Skins Return Today, Hold Practice Here

The Washington Redskins will return today after nearly a month of travel and training with a sporty little one game winning streak and high hopes of an Eastern Division pennant in the National Pro Football League.

Coaches Flaherty, Edwards and a full squad of players, one closer resembling last year's squad than any other in the league, are scheduled to pull in at 8:40 p. m. from Chicago. The 'Skins were luncheon guests of Pro Grid Commissioner Elmer Layden yesterday and included a light workout in their Windy City stay.

The squad will practice at Fairlawn Field in Anacostia today, tomorrow and Saturday and will make Griffith Stadium their practice field next week after the Nats leave for the season.

The team will take up new quarters in the New Colonial Hotel this year after several years in the Fairfax.

The Redskins will continue their exhibition game schedule Monday night against the Green Bay Packers in Baltimore and will make final preparation for the league schedule in a Sunday exhibition with the Chicago Bears September 13 here.

Wyatt, Dodgers Win; Giants Check Cards

Reds' Walters Loses After Flock Uses Five Pitchers, 3-2

St. Louis Club Now Trails Brooklyn By 4½ Games

By the Associated Press

Cincinnati, Sept. 2.—The Brooklyn Dodgers had to go through a 12-inning wringer operated by Bucky Walters to beat the Cincinnati Reds today, but they came out unscathed with a 3-to-2 victory and their National League lead inflated to 4½ games.

It was a tense struggle for the Dodgers, their second extra-inning battle in three days, and Manager Leo Durocher used five of his best pitchers with Whitlow Wyatt eventually making his first relief appearance of the year, finishing the game and getting credit for his seventeenth victory.

Walters, who himself made three hits, batting in one of the Reds' runs and scoring the other, held forth alone till the twelfth when he walked Pewee Reese and Wyatt sacrificed. Then Lefty Clyde Shoun was summoned to the mound, John Rizzo batted for Dixie Walker and popped up, but Arky Vaughan followed with a sharp single to right and Reese scored, although Vaughan was thrown out trying to stretch his blow to a two-bagger.

Curt Davis, who received credit for two wins in two days of relief assignments within the last week, started on the mound for Brooklyn and was effective for four scoreless innings while the Dodgers took a two-run lead. In the second Reese singled and Davis doubled him home, then in the fourth Dolph Camilli walked, stole second, went on to third as Catcher Ray Lamanno's throw soared into center field, and scored on Mickey Owen's bunt down the first base line.

Cincinnati tied the count in the fifth as Lamanno and Walters hit doubles and Eddie Joost singled. When Max Marshall walked, Hugh Casey replaced Davis and matched Walters' tight hurling till removed

Market Ties Printers, 1-1

Center Market and the Union Printers played a 1-1 tie in the city's weekday sandlot championships yesterday on the Ellipse. The Printers scored their run in the ninth on a pair of errors and Jim Halloran's single which scored Hofberg. The game will be replayed today at 5:30 on the South Ellipse.

Center Market's run came in the fifth inning. Dansburger walked and Frank Watt singled him to third. Watt was out at second on Debner's fielder's choice while Dansburger was held at third.

Pitcher Gump Bailey then threw to first in an attempt to pick off Debner. Dansburger was caught between third and home on the play and scored when Catcher Grier made a wild throw.

Pirates Beat Amazing Phils, 5-2, But Get Only 2 Singles

By the Associated Press

Pittsburgh, Sept. 2.—Scoring four runs in the eighth without a hit, the Pittsburgh Pirates tonight defeated Philadelphia, 5 to 2, before the season's smallest night crowd here, 3712 fans.

Lefty Frank Hoerst held the Bucs to two singles—all they got for the night—until the fatal eighth when he walked four batters and threw low to the plate on a grounder trying to catch a runner. Relief Hurler Johnny Podgajny completed the fiasco by hitting two batsmen with the bases filled.

Lloyd Dietz held the Phils to seven hits, three of them by Bobby Bragan, but looked like a loser because of his own balk until the Pirates' walk-around began.

Merrill May doubled to start the Phils' fourth and scored the first run when Elbie Fletcher threw Danny Murtaugh's bunt wild. Later Danny worked his way around to third and scored when Dietz balked.

Fletcher's single sent Eddie Stewart home from third base with the first Pirate run in the fourth. The only other safety off Hoerst was Vince DiMaggio's infield hit in the sixth.

Bill Dudley Signs To Play With Pro Steeler Eleven

By the Associated Press

Charlottesville, Va., Sept. 2.—Coach Frank Murray of the University of Virginia said tonight he had received a telegram to the effect that Bill Dudley, the Cavaliers' all-America player of last season, had signed a contract to play professional football with the Pittsburgh Steelers of the National Football League.

Dudley is now in training with the Steelers at Hershey, Pa. The Bluefield, Va., grid star recently played with the College All-Stars against the Chicago Bears, pro champions, in the annual all-star game in Chicago.

Later, he started at halfback for the all-stars against the Philadelphia Eagles. In both games the collegians were defeated.

Errors Help White Sox Win Twice From Nats, 8-2 and 7-6

Wynn Victim Of 17-Hit Attack in 1st

4000 Customers Suffer as Rookie Bevil Is Routed In First Inning

By Shirley Povich
Post Staff Writer

The Nats collected a two-game losing streak yesterday, due chiefly to errors, not including their original error of showing up at the park for the scheduled doubleheader with the White Sox.

They loss the first game—an 8-to-2 affair—which was combined murder and suicide. The White Sox murdered Early Wynn's pitching for 17 hits and the Nats added a dash of hari kari with six misplays, mostly of the wild throw variety. None of the 4000 customers were hurt.

The second game, a 7-to-6 victory for the White Sox, was distinguished by a big false alarm which the Nats stirred up in the ninth inning when they threatened to wipe out Chicago's 7-to-3 lead, but fell one run short.

In that second game, though, the Nats come pretty close to equalling an American League record. They left 16 runners on base, only two short of the all-time mark.

Wade Knocked Out

The customers, who had hooted and jeered the pitiable efforts of the Nats in the first game, were in a forgiving mood in the ninth inning of the second game, when the Nats started to get tough with the left-handed Wade. There was great excitement when they knocked Wade out of the box, shoved three runs across against Relief Pitcher Joe Haynes and had the tying run on third with only one out.

In fact they had the bases full with only one out at that point, but Mickey Vernon didn't send anybody home except the customers. He grounded to Second Baseman Webb who routed the ball around the bases for a game-ending double play, and the Nats were licked again.

Bucky Harris started a young right-hander by the name of Lou Bevil, late of Chattanooga, in that second game and that was a mistake. Bevil's big league debut was something less than a success. He faced seven batters and the only one he got out was a man who deliberately sacrificed. He gave up four hits and four runs to the White Sox before Bill Zuber retired the side.

The Nats were sort of helpless against Wade in the early innings. Al Evans didn't do the White Sox any harm. In his first three batting appearances he struck out twice and popped up once to leave seven runners on base. Bebore the game was over, Evans raised his own private total of abandoned base runners to nine.

Zuber drove home a run for the Nats in the fourth with a single to center and in the fifth two walks and Sullivan's single put the Sox lead to 4-2. But Zuber gave two runs right back to the White Sox on a pair of walks and Lodigiani's single in the seventh.

Three hits reclaimed a run for the Nats in the seventh and the game moved into the last of the ninth with Wade leading, 7-3.

Three Chisox Score

Then the Nats unloaded their threat. Sullivan singled, Clary struck out, Evans singled to left, and Pinch-hitter Croucher walked to fill the bases with one out. Haynes relieved Wade and walked Case to force a run home. Spence singled off Webb's glove and two more runs scored. When Webb's throw to the plate was wild, Case moved to third and Spence to second. Estalella was purposely passed to fill the bases for double play purposes and that's when Mickey Vernon obliged 'em.

Atrocious is the word for that first game performance of the Nats. Everybody in the White Sox lineup got at least one hit, and Webb and Lodigiani each splattered three around the premises. Buck Ross held the Nats to eight blows.

The White Sox got the necessary winning runs in the fifth inning on five hits, three men scoring. Ross himself opened with a single, Kolloway doubled to right and Hoag, Appling and Lodigiani singled to get the three runs home.

After that the Nats simply tossed runs at the White Sox. They scored

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

Louise Brough, the youngster from Beverly Hills, Calif., gets a forehand across while advancing in the National Women's Championship at New York. Millicent Lang was the latest victim of the top-seeded player

Frank Parker Impressive in Net Victory

By the Associated Press

New York, Sept. 2.—Still flaying like an automaton and gaining confidence with each succeeding set on grass, Frankie Parker stroked smoothly into the quarter-final round of the national tennis championships today with a 6—2, 6—0, 6—1 victory over William Vogt of Drexel Hill, Pa.

The 27-year-old veteran obviously has acquired poise and a certain amount of pepper in the year since he got away from the perpetual strain of playing tennis for a living and went to work for a movie company in Hollywood. He is playing tennis as if it were fun now, and his game has benefited.

Today's victory was Frankie's third of the tournament, and he had not yet been forced to play an extra set. He had won four out of nine sets by love scores, and in two others had yielded only one game each. The crowd of 1500 that watched him dazzle Vogt left Forest Hills satisfied that Frankie was going to be extremely tough to argue out of the championship.

In the day's only other men's singles match, George Richards, the left-handed young slugger from Montebello, Calif., rallied from the well-known brink of defeat to win out over Ladislav Hecht, the former Czech Davis cupper, 6—2, 3—6, 0—6, 12—10, 6—2.

Eight players were left tonight. Besides Parker and Richards, there were four other seeded Americans—Ted Schroeder, jr., William Talbert, Seymour Greenberg and Mulloy; and two South American stars, Pancho Segura of Ecuador and Alejo Russell of the Argentine.

The women's quarter-final bracket also was completed through three one-sided victories by seeded players. Louise Brough of Beverly Hills, seeded No. 1 defeated Mrs. Millicent Lang of New York City, 6—1, 6—1; Margaret Osborne of San Francisco, seeded No. 3, beat Mrs. Marta Andrade of Miami, 6—0, 6—0, and Mrs. Helen Pederson Rihbany of New York City beat Barbara Nields of Rye, N. Y., 6—1, 6—1.

The other women survivors were Pauline Betz of Los Angeles, Doris Hart of Miami, Mary Arnold of Los Angeles, Helen Bernard of New York City, and 15-year-old Shirley Fry of Akron, Ohio. Shirley alone was unseeded.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, Sept. 2.—Conn McCreary, who never weighed 100 pounds in his life, and stands 4 feet 4 inches, looked up from a piece of rare roast beef as big as himself and told us the strange story of his rise to fame as one of America's great jockeys.

CONSIDINE

"I wanted to be a mechanical engineer," said the tiny guy with a map of Ireland for a kisser. "I got as far as the senior year in Roosevelt High School, in St. Louis. But for years everybody kept saying to me, 'you'd make a good jockey. You're little enough.

"I had never been on a horse in my life. You know, a kid around a city doesn't see much of horses. But I figured it was worth investigating. I had read somewheres that the home of the thoroughbred was in Lexington, Ky. So a few weeks before I was supposed to go back to school, I got my people to give me enough for bus fare to Lexington.

"Well, I got there and somebody told me that all the big places were located outside of town. So I got out on the road and began trying to thumb a ride. Finally a car stopped. I got in and began to talk—you know how you do—and the man said his name was Steve Judge . . . He said he'd give me a job, and darn if he didn't. I'm still working for him—he trains for Royce Martin's Woodvale Stable. That was 5 years ago when I was 16.

"Like I said, I had never been on a horse in my life. I had never even seen a race horse. But when you think you can do something, you can do it. They boosted me up on a 3-year-old named Irish Moon, and there I was, not knowing anything about how to sit on her or hold her or anything. Oh, boy, it took three months . . . three months of getting your brain jarred out. Nobody told me anything. A fellow gets on and does the best he can.

"My people didn't seem to mind when I wrote them that I had a job and I wanted to stay.

"I exercised 'em through 1937 and part of 1938, then Mr. Judge let me start in a real race. It was at Delaware Park. He let me ride a horse named Lady Charlotte twice. I finished last the first time and beat only one horse the second time and I didn't ride again for a year. He was just giving me a little experience.

"At Arlington Park in 1939 Mr. Judge let me ride Florence M. and we win. But I didn't have another winner the rest of the year, and I must've ridden 30 or 40 times. I started off in 1940 at Hialeah with a winner and win 44 races in 30 days. I've been going ever since. I won $300,000 that year and I might do pretty good this year, too. I had the most winners at Saratoga. I had 33."

McCreary rode the sensational Devil's Thumb to victory in the $40,000 Hopeful at Saratoga last Saturday. We asked him about the colt, which isn't eligible for the $80,000 futurity.

"He's the best 2-year-old I ever rode," he said. "In fact, he's the best horse I ever rode, and I've had some good ones like Our Boots and Haltal and Devil Diver and Lochinvar. He's got so darn much heart. I'm glad he's not in the futurity. That means he'll get more rest than the others. I think he'll win the Derby next year, just like that. Mr. Boeing and the others didn't think he was much good and he wasn't until they put blinkers on him and made him stop looking around. But what a real good colt he is now!"

We asked him about his folks again. "My dad came down to Florida, without me knowing about it one day in 1940," he said, fondly, "and I win a $5000 stake that day. It gave him a real kick."

Mrs. McCreary, a quiet girl, cut in here. She said, "tell him about going home."

Conn chuckled. "Yeah. I went home to St. Louis last winter and a bunch of the fellows I know decided to go horseback riding one day. I went along . . . the big shot, you know. And darn it, it was just like trying to start all over again. I couldn't ride that stable horse to save my neck."

Bobby Jones, Wood to Play Here for Relief

The District's first match featuring big-name golfers for the benefit of varied War Relief agencies will be held September 20 at Columbia Country Club it was announced yesterday, with Capt. Robert T. Jones and Craig Wood as the drawing cards.

JONES

Jones, a frequent visitor to Columbia since his grand slam days, will pair with host pro Fred McLeod against Wood and Chick Evans, Chicago's former open and amateur champion. Evans won both national titles in 1916 and the amateur for a second time in 1920.

Tickets will be $1.25 including tax, and the entire proceeds will go to relief agencies. All four golfers are donating their services. Jones has arranged for a day's leave from his Army duties.

Wood, who in the past two years broke his major tournament jinx by winning the Masters, National Open and Canadian Open, will be making his first District appearance in an exhibition match.

The handsome, blond New Yorker, an international gallery favorite for a number of years, is one of the four biggest names in golf today.

Hale America Tournaments Feature Week-End Golf Card

Four Clubs Also Begin Club Title Play; Association Furnishes Certificates

The last of the series of Hale America tournaments, for the benefit of the Red Cross, and the opening of club championship qualifying rounds at four clubs feature the last big weekend golf card of the season starting Saturday and continuing through Labor Day.

A majority of the clubs plan to hold the Red Cross benefit events. The entry fee is $1 and the United States Golf Association furnishes certificates as prizes. Eighty-five per cent of the intake goes to the national Red Cross and 15 per cent to the local chapter. Congressional, fourth in the country in contributions to the Red Cross thus far and Indian Spring, where Chairman Frank Mirth plans another drive aided by lavish decorations, figure to lead the local clubs.

Argyle, Kenwood, Indian Spring and Bannockburn members will qualify for the club championships.

The complete intraclub schedule as announced yesterday by golf committee chairman and club professionals:

ARGYLE—Final qualifying rounds for club championship. Hale America Tournament.

BANNOCKBURN — Club championship qualifying rounds. Finals A. L. Dowling Trophy play. Hale America Tournament.

BELLE HAVEN—John McPherson Trophy play Saturday and Sunday, 36 holes, medal. Morning sweepstakes and mixed Scotch foursome in afternoon Monday.

BRADLEY HILLS — Blind bogey, Sunday and Monday.

CHEVY CHASE—Secretary's Cup, 18 holes, match play against par. Entry fee is $1, to go to Red Cross.

COLUMBIA—Best ball, two-ball. Driving, aproaching and putting contests Monday. Hale America.

CONGRESSIONAL — Three individual Hale America tournaments over three days. Mixed Scotch foursome, Sunday and Monday.

INDIAN SPRING — Club championship qualifying rounds. Hale America tournament over three days.

KENWOOD—Club championship qualifying, Saturday and Sunday. Hale America tournament. Flag tournament, driving, aproaching and putting on Monday.

MANOR—Blind bogey for Hale America. Semifinals, finals. Two-man team championship.

WASHINGTON — Hale America, 18 holes, full handicap.

WOODMONT — Hale America; sweepstakes and flag tournament.

Levering Wins' Md. Senior Golf; Locals Trail

Special Dispatch to The Post

Baltimore, Md., Sept. 2—Four golfers from Washington were among 31 who participated in the Maryland State Golf Association's fourteenth annual men's senior championship this afternon at the Green Spring Valley Club. The event was open to all club members of the State who are 50 years of age and over.

W. J. Peters of Manor annexed the laurels among the Washingtonians with an 87, low for those 60 and over.

Scores of Congressional Club members were: J. F. McCarron 88-8,80; Dr. Noah Pomeroy 9-14—77; Dr. R. A. Keilty 91-9—82.

A. C. Levering of the Elkridge Hunt Club won the senior event after playing an extra hole with John C. Thomas of Green Spring. They were tied at 79.

Thomas took low net honors with 79-9—70.

Mixed Scotch Golf to Help The Red Cross

District Golf Association officials yesterday announced a mixed Scotch foursome tournament for October 5 with the entire proceeds for the benefit of the Red Cross.

The 18-hole partner event will be held at Columbia Country Club and prizes will be donated. The entire entry fees, probably $3 a couple, will go to the Red Cross. Details will be announced later and there is a possibility the date will be changed a week or so either way. The event is an added starter to the schedule.

Mel Shorey, host pro to the Washington Open championship at Indian Spring, announced yesterday the 36-hole medal play championship has been moved back one day to Thursday, September 24.

Mrs. C. E. McGowan, chairman of the Manor Country Club women's golf committee, announced an addition to the golf card in an 18-hole Manor invitation for Tuesday, September 22. Mrs. McGowan will accept entries.

Dates for the Columbia club championship were also announced yesterday. The week-long event will be held October 5-10, with two days for qualifying and four for match play, as usual.

Rubin, Linen Ten in 1-0 Softie Victory

Benny Rubin and Standard Linen upset the dope bucket at Washington Softball Stadium by knocking off the favored Surf Club in the semifinal of the city softball championship series, 1 to 0.

Rubin's pitching was by far the feature, the University of Maryland dental student holding the heavy hitting series leaders hitless and banging out a single himself.

Cy Genderson, Linen left fielder, apparently saved the game in the second with a diving catch off Harrel's bat with Plaisted roosting on third and two out. Barney Wallenstein also came through with a sparkling stop and throw to cut off a run in the next stanza.

The game was won in the fourth inning when Jumbo George was safe on Collins' error. Jake Rosenblum electrified the Linen rooters with a slashing double to left which put George on third, from where he scored on Aquilino's passed ball.

Tonight at 8 o'clock the three-way tie will be played off and the winner is to go to Baltimore Saturday for the Mid-Atlantic Regional Tournament. The schedule calls for Surf Club and Standard Linen to play at 8 o'clock and the winner to play the Kavakos Gorillas immediately after.

Ray Scarborough, Hudson to Pitch For Nats Today

Facing a pitching shortage because of the run of double-headers, Manager Bucky Harris will promote Rookie Ray Scarborough to a starting role in a twin bill with the White Sox today.

Sid Hudson will pitch the first game for the Nats. Scarborough has not been credited with a victory this season or charged with a loss, although figuring in several games.

Griffith Stadium fans will see Left-handed Thornton Lee in action for the first time this season. Recently recovered from a lame arm, he is one of Jimmy Dykes' pitching choices. The other will be Bill Dietrich, a right-hander who used to pitch for the Nats.

Pin Franchises Open

There are two vacancies in the Businessmen's Bowling League at New Recreation and "Lefty" Woodin, an officer of the league, would like for any team with an average of 550 to get in touch with him. A meeting of team captains is scheduled for 8 o'clock Thursday night at the alleys.

Aztecs vs. Rockville

The Washington Aztecs will be host to the Rockville Athletic Club Sunday in a double-header on the Oxon Hill diamond. The first game is scheduled for 1:30 p. m.

Al Bocson Suffers Broken Collarbone in Timonium Spill

Filly Falls Approaching Stretch Run

Rider Rushed to Baltimore Hospital; Teco Tack Wins Feature of Day

By Walter Haight

A Staff Correspondent

Timonium, Md., Sept. 2.—Jockey Al Bocson, 20-year-old Detroit boy, suffered a broken left collarbone and possible internal injuries today in a spectacular spill that marked the fifth race, best offering on the Wednesday program. Bocson was riding J. Pedroe's Cushlamacree when the filly stumbled approaching the stretch and threw Bocson heavily. The boy was rushed to the Maryland General Hospital in Baltimore after the track physician made a hasty examination. Bocson has been prominent in smaller track racing this season and served out his apprenticeship at the Cumberland meeting.

W. B. Casilear's Teco Tack won the race. The 3-year-old daughter of Hard Tack took command early and was not headed, winning by a length margin over R. C. Waple's Rolls Rough. Mrs. Evelyn Smith's Nyleve was a fast closing third in the field of eight. Teco Tack paid $7.70 and turned in time of 1:01 for the new Timonium course, the fastest since the 5 furlongs was put in here at the start of the meeting.

Jockey Butsy Hernandez, who has taken a new lease on life since coming back after a suspension, took Teco Tack to the front early, washed Out and Rolls Rough attempted to run with the leader. Washed Out stopped but Rolls Rough kept going. It was approaching the stretch that Cushlamacree moved up on the outside along with Amperage. Just at the bend, Cushlamacree stumbled and went down. In the stretch drive, Teco Tack held Rolls Rough safe although the latter did not appear to be hard driven while racing along the rail.

It just doesn't seem to be in the books for Royal Business to win another race. Jockey Buedy Root gave the mare an excellent ride in today's sixth race but the daughter of Sun Meadow missed getting up by a neck margin and was beaten by Pittsburgh, a $19.70 shot. Paid money in the field of seven went to R. H. Hutchison's Supreme King. Pittsburgh raced Pep Talk into defeat to take command and was tiring rapidly but hung on long enough to take the decision.

The daily double paid $14.10. Queen Minatoka came through the stretch like a wild horse to win the first race and pay an individual mutuel of $7.60 while Terry May led every inch of the way in the second race in the role of a $3.80 favorite.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—QUEEN MINATOKA, $7.60, $4.80, $3.80; DOCTOR POSEY, $7.00, $5.20; GAY PLAYER, $4.70.

QUEEN MINATOKA lacked early speed, was taken wide for racing room and closed with bold rush to win going away. DOCTOR POSEY was well placed from start, disposed of FEELING HIGH to take command but could not resist winner while under strong handling. GAY PLAYER raced forwardly and showed even effort. GLENDOVER had speed in spots and is ready to win.

SECOND RACE—Six and one-half furlongs. Purse, $600; claiming. For 3-year-olds. Start good. Won easily; place same. Went to post at 2:55½. Off at 2:56. Winner, Claude Feltner's ch. f. (3) by Chestnut Oak—Willie May. Trained by Claude Feltner. Value to winner, $428; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:21⅘.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—TERRY MAY, $3.80, $2.50, $2.30; SALLYMAR, $3.20, $2.80; DARTING STAR, $2.90.

TERRY MAY forged to front at once, drew out, saved ground while setting pace and won easily. SALLYMAR was closest to pace from start and could not menace winner. DARTING STAR was hard ridden and had no excuses. MATE'S LASS weakened gradually.

Daily Double—QUEEN MINATOKA and TERRY MAY Paid $14.10.

THIRD RACE—Six and one-half furlongs. Purse, $600; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 3:26½. Off at 3:26½. Winner, B. T. Pitts' br. g. (5) by Dress Parade—Targeteer. Trained by J. T. Harris. Value to winner, $425; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:22⅘.

†Fell.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—TECO TACK, $7.70, $4.50, $4.40; ROLLS ROUGH, $6.50, $5.70; NYLEVE, $4.30.

TECO TACK went to front at once, saved ground, drew clear of WASHED OUT and ROLLS ROUGH and held away thereafter under good handling. ROLLS ROUGH was in thick of contention from start and did not appear to be ridden out while on inside in stretch run. NYLEVE closed with bold rush on outside. WASHED OUT had good early speed and stopped.

SIXTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles. Purse, $600; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 4:34½. Off at 4:35. Winner, Mrs. J. H. Elliott's ch. g. (4) by Bishop's Rock—Moonlit. Trained by William Lynch. Value to winner, $425; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:57.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—PITTSBURGH, $19.70, $8.30, $3.20; ROYAL BUSINESS, $3.10, $2.60; SUPREME FLAG, $3.30.

PITTSBURGH, in hand while setting pace, took command early, but tired in stretch and had to be ridden out. ROYAL BUSINESS closed well under punishment. SUPREME FLAG came gamely after breaking slowly. PEP TALK had speed for three-quarters and was eased up when well beaten.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $600; claiming. For 3 and 4 year old fillies. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 5:25. Off at 5:26½. Winner, Mrs. E. D. Bowers' ch. f. (4) by Theatrical—Park. Trained by P. C. Stephenson. Value to winner, $425; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:52⅘.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—STADIUM, $6.30, $2.90, $2.80; MY ONE, $2.80, $2.60; SKEWER, $7.20.

STADIUM ran out at first turn, recovered quickly, improved position steadily and wore down MY ONE in closing stages. MY ONE was rushed while setting pace and saving ground had nothing left. SKEWER closed a gap from sluggish beginning. DREAMING TIME was closest to pace early and tired gradually.

EIGHTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles. Purse, $600; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 5:59. Off at 6:00. Winner, Mrs. J. B. Bond's ch. m. Selections at Timonium

Dear Al:

The competition for prizes among horse-drawn vehicles transporting persons to the track has met with unanimous approval. The first day only two rigs turned out. Yesterday there were 16 that ranged from pony carts to a carriage drawn by a five-gaited horse. Pimlico may have a similar show each day during its meeting. I'm suggesting also that they give prizes to the best-looking bicycle riders. Jockey Sammy Palumbo hasn't put in an appearance as yet. Al Bocson fell off Star Strung after the finish of yesterday's first race but he was not injured. Looks like they're scared of Walter Haight, the colt. The Governor's Handicap didn't fill and so little Whirlaway will have to wait awhile. Jockey Willie Dufford was booed when the favorite, Feeling High, quit under him in the first race. What did Dufford do about it? He booed right back and then came back in the third race to ride War Target, a $20.10 shot. He was all smiles this time when he returned to weigh in. That's a sour bugle that calls the horses on the track here. The Risler boy at Charles Town is still the champion. Dufford was fined $50 for crowding horses at the first turn in the first race. Claude Feitner is taking a few horses to Havre de Grace. He missed the Maryland milers last spring, being busy getting his horses ready for Charles Town and the smaller tracks. He did a good job at that having won 48 races since May 11. What these horses earned ain't hay, either. In answer to inquiry: The Ensor riding at Garden State Park is the old and original Buddy Ensor essaying another comeback. Frank Small, chairman of the Maryland Racing Commission, was at the track yesterday. One thing that amuses me at the Fair which runs along this track is the attempts of people to look nonchalant and eat an ear of corn in the midway. See you on the rail . . . BILL.

First race—WICKCLIFFE GIRL showed flashes of speed in her last. May be the right one in the day's opener. SHANTY BOAT should go well with this kind. HAPPY HANNAH won at Marlboro and will be right there if sent postward.

Second race—HAPPY SLAVE is dropped down into what looks like ideal company for his purposes. Needs only the right ride. KAYDEEKAY is good now and belongs close. MALVOIS for the show end.

Third race—FLYING FALCON gets my call in the day's steeplechase. Likes the course and I see no reason for mistakes. DONNA'S PAL won at Bel Air and appears to be a strong factor. TAM O'SHANTER is much better than that last.

Fourth race—DISCRETION gets company that he should beat in this field. LER-LIN can't be as bad as that last. CLAY HILL downed cheaper ones at the Marlboro track.

Fifth race—SEA SLAVE has been closing like the wind in shorter races and promises to down this kind. Looks like the day's best bet. UPSETTING and LAURIDEN for the place and show positions.

Sixth race—GLITTER GIRL gets a good figure in this company. She meets her kind and I'm going to string along. LAST BET is better than generally rated and looms as one to beat. NAVIGATION for the minor money.

Seventh race—HERE GOES needs only to make the turns to win over this field. COURT BLENHEIM is good now and will be prominent. BARGAIN BOY for the show end.

Eighth race—LEONARDTOWN and WILDMUTE are a close fit in the day's finale. I like them in the order named. CORORA is an upset possibility.

Best bet—SEA SLAVE.

Braves Beat Cubs in 10th By 2-1 Count

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Sept. 2.—Lon Warneke shut out Boston until the eighth inning today and then the Braves tied the score and went on to win in ten innings, 2 to 1. It was Warneke's fifth loss since returning to the Cubs.

A double by Pinch Hitter Clyde Kluttz with Eddie Miller on first gave Boston its tying run. Miller then accounted for the winning run with a long fly that scored Phil Masi. Masi had gone in to run for Ernie Lombardi after the latter had singled and had moved to third on Max West's single.

The Cubs got their one run off Manuel Salvo in the third on Stan Hack's single, Phil Cavarretta's sacrifice and Dom Dallessandro's single. Salvo went out in the eighth for a pinch hitter and Bill Donovan got credit for the victory.

once in the sixth when both Wynn and Hoffman made wild throws. Johnny Sullivan contributed both a fumble and a wild throw to the Sox's two-run seventh, in which Hoffman also made a wild heave. The Sox got two more in the eighth, Wynn made his second wild heave of the day to help two more Cihcago runs along, as if they needed any help.

Meanwhile the Nats were straining themselves to score two runs and avert a shutout.

Indians Crush Athletics, 12-3; Ferrick Wins

By The Associated Press

Philadelphia, Sept. 2.—Cleveland crushed the hapless Athletics 12 to 3 today in their final meeting of the season at Shibe Park. It gave the Indians 16 victories against five for the Mackmen in their season's series with one game left to play at Cleveland September 9.

Tom Ferrick, one-time Mackman righthander, won his third game of the year against two losses for the Tribe. He eased up in the eighth and ninth innings when the A's scored all of its runs.

Stores' Credit Receipts Show Upsurge Here

Collections on charge and instalment accounts of Washington department stores showed marked improvement in July, the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond reported yesterday. The improvement was expected, since the Federal regulation requiring prompter payments went into effect in that month.

Store collections on open accounts in the Capital in July were 56 per cent of the accounts due at the beginning of the month. Payments in the whole Fifth Reserve District averaged 55 per cent. In July, 1941, payments here were 41 per cent of the amount due at the beginning of the month.

July collections on instalment accounts here averaged 19 per cent of total receivable at the beginning of the month. In July, 1941, collections averaged 14 per cent.

Outstanding orders for merchandise of local stores were 18 per cent less at the end of July than a year ago, the survey noted. Orders for goods averaged 12 per cent less in the entire Fifth District.

The Richmond bank added that stocks of goods on hand in Washington stores on July 31 were 78 per cent heavier than at the same time last year. The average gain over last year in the Fifth District was 67 per cent.

As already reported, July retail trade in Washington was 19 per cent better than last year and 26 per cent improved in the first seven months of 1942.

Rail Revenues Soar Here

Washington postal receipts in August soared to $914,145, a new all-time high for that month and a gain of 22.7 per cent over the same month last year. Revenues for the first eight months likewise set an all-time record for that period, reaching $7,354,332 compared with $6,034,-194 in the like 1941 period.

Nixon Heads New OPA Unit

Robert A. Nixon, a member of the Wisconsin Public Service Commission, yesterday was appointed director of the Office of Price Administration's newly created transportation and public utilities division.

The new division, the OPA said, will be responsible for all necessary action relating to transportation and public utility matters.

Nixon, a native of Viroqua, Wisc., is a former member of the Wisconsin Legislature, and a member of the executive committee of the National Association of Railroad and Utilities Commissioners. He has been a member of the Wisconsin Public Service Commission since March 1, 1937.

Realty Bond Average Gains

The Amott-Baker real estate bond-price average, covering 200 real estate securities, including four in Washington, scored its sharpest advance in six months during August. The increase for the month was 1.6 per cent, which compared with a gain of seven-tenths per cent during July. The best previous gain over the past six months was nine-tenths per cent registered during April. On August 31, the average price per $1000 bond stood at $314 as compared to $309 on July 31 and $302 at the close of 1941. The year-to-date gain for the averages was 3.9 per cent.

W. P. Brown Leads N. S. T. A.

William Perry Brown of New Orleans has been elected president of the National Security Traders Association, succeeding Joseph W. Senar of Baltimore. Mr. Brown was one of the first officers of the National Security Traders Association and has been active in its affairs. Other officers elected at the annual meeting in Chicago include John C. Hecht of Los Angeles, first vice president; Benjamin H. Van Keegan of New York, second vice president; Edward H. Welch of Chicago, secretary; Earl M. Scanlon of Denver, treasurer; Victor Mosely of Philadelphia, and Henry Arnold of Cincinnati, members of the executive committee.

Diesel Engine Draws Record Oil Shipment

Baltimore, Sept. 2 (AP).—Officials of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad said today a Diesel engine-drawn train consisting of 81 tank cars, one of the heaviest through-rail shipments of oil on record, arrived at Twin Oaks, Pa., from Chicago 20 minutes ahead of schedule last night.

The company said the 5,400-horsepower engine, first diesel freight locomotive to be placed in regular use in the East, hauled 715,000 gallons of oil over the 911-mile haul with only five stops for crew changes and routine inespections.

A. B. & O. statement said Diesel engines had been previously used for passenger trains and switching, but not for freight hauls.

They claimed for the locomotive, which was tested over 83,000 miles of track before being placed in use, a speed of 70 miles per hour, and said it was capable of more work per ton than comparable steam locomotives.

The locomotive measures 193 feet in length and is made up of four short power cars each containing a 16-cylinder Diesel engine.

The crankshafts of the Diesels are connected directly to four electric generators, which feed power into traction motors in the trucks. There are 32 power wheels.

Holding Firm Plans To Reclassify Stock

Philadelphia, Sept. 2 (AP).—American Utilities Service Corp., a holding company with operating firms in 10 States, proposed to the Securities and Exchange Commission today a reclassification of its stock which would wipe out 1,200,000 shares of no par common stock now held in a voting trust.

The new setup would leave outstanding only the new stock and $4,700,000 of 6 per cent collateral trust bonds, series A, due 1964.

The corporation's operating companies are in Illinois, Wisconsin, West Virginia, Missouri, Louisiana, Florida, Pennsylvania, Mississippi, Virginia and Minnesota.

Dr. Roosevelt Expected to Prescribe Remedies For Inflation Disease in Labor Day Message

The Virus: 84 Billion To Spend and Only 75 Billion in Goods

By Claude A. Jagger
Wide World Financial Editor

When President Roosevelt makes his forthcoming speech on inflation, it will be in the role of a physician telling us we have to stop a plague.

Inflation is a plague which is here now, spreading and getting worse.

But it is in mild form; the idea is to stamp it out.

You can't see inflation with the naked eye. It is like a deadly virus. But you can see evidences of its work all around you.

Your grocery bills have been going up, with the increased prices of butter, eggs, beef. That's one of the first signs.

The kind of inflation the Government is worried about is that developing when there is more money for spending than there are things to spend it for.

The billions spent for war mean a rising spendable income; the materials needed for the war machine mean less things for the average civilian to buy.

Price Administrator Leon Henderson's most recent estimate says individual citizens this year will have 84 million dollars of spending cash to buy a year's output of civilian goods of not more than 75 million dollars.

When inflation is really out of control, people are actually bidding against one another for the things which can be bought, so that prices, unless otherwise held down; rush upward and money is not worth what it was before the process started.

There isn't any single pill or remedy for the disease.

The Government's money physicians have tried large or small doses of higher taxes, war bond selling, price regulations and rationing.

President Roosevelt has indicated to his press conference that two of the remedies he will suggest in a Labor Day message to Congress and a fire-side chat to the people are curbs on wages and on farm prices designed to keep them in proper relation to living costs without, however, imposing a rigid ceiling.

If you have any doubt about what inflation can do to make a country sick, look at the record.

In the first World War period, the cost of living about doubled in this country. In France it increased about 500 per cent. In Germany money became practically valueless.

When the value of money is impaired seriously, stable elements in the economy, such as bonds, insurance policies, savings accounts and pensions are thrown out of kilter.

The cutting in half of the purchasing value of money in this country during and after the last war, a relatively mild inflation, is blamed by many for the subsequent boom and collapse of the 'twenties and 'thirties.

The more serious inflation in France, many hold, was a factor in that Nation's collapse of 1940, since it had undermined the parts of the social structure which depended on stable incomes.

The cataclysmic inflation in Germany after the last war, when the people as a whole found their money reduced to worthlessness, was instrumental in promoting a mass cynicism that made the Nazi rise possible, most observers agree.

Do we need to be downhearted about the outlook?

Economists agree that we do not, if we are on our toes, take adequate measures, and see them through.

Our neighbors, longer in the war than the United States, already have had fair success in restraining the price run-away.

In Canada, where sweeping wage and price ceilings (first advocated by our own elder statesman, Bernard M. Baruch) were adopted last December, the rise in the cost of living since the start of the war has been 16 per cent.

In England, which has nothing like our potential control of prices because it must buy much of its goods and food abroad, the rise has been 28 per cent. Obviously, England can't set prices on goods which must be bought in the markets of foreign countries.

In the United States, the rise has been 18 per cent and is continuing, despite measures already taken.

But a rising level of prices provides a sort of phoney free hayride: for the farmer at the expense of labor, for labor at the expense of industrial profits, for profits at the expense of the other two.

The headache in regulation comes during controversy over whose hayride gets cancelled.

Actually, nobody gains by a general wide upward spiral in prices, wages and costs. The value of every man's dollar is out, whether he gets it as wages, dividends or farm income.

Backbone of our fight on the inflation plague to date is the seven-point program announced in April by the President, including:

Heavier taxes to keep personal and corporate profits "at a low reasonable level;" ceilings on many kinds of farm prices; sale of billions in war bonds to the public; rationing of scarce commodities; discouragement of installment selling and encouragement for paying off mortgages and other debts.

Retail prices of most important goods, and rents in designated "defense areas" were frozen at March levels by the Office of Price Administration as the first step in the program.

A wage stabilization formula appeared in the War Labor Board's ruling in the Little Steel case, and has been confirmed now for Big Steel; it provides generally for wage increases up to as much as 15 per cent over January 1, 1941.

The increase was about the same as in the cost of living during the period. The board promised due consideration to "inequalities and substandards of living."

Working out these and other measures, however, has presented a confused picture.

Congress is still putting together a tax bill, and how far it will go toward soaking up the big excess national income is still uncertain; also how the burden will be split among the various elements of the population.

No one knows for sure, in the wage field, how far the Little Steel formula will be extended, nor what are inequalities and substandards. The Presidenital message may give a clew as to further wage controls.

Stabilization of farm prices is still left to a complicated formula of 110 per cent of parity—the latter being a theoretical balance between farm prices and costs—which would leave more room for boosts in farm income. Here, too, the Presidential dictum may be decisive.

Sale of war bonds, pushed hard, still is running a bit behind expectations.

Rationing has been inaugurated for only a few products.

Restrictions have been placed on installment and retail credit, involving larger down payments, quicker setling of the debt.

But the cost of living, especially of foods, has continued to rise.

Throughout the controversy of this spring and summer:

Farm spokesmen have insisted that increased wages and other cost factors made higher prices necessarily for adequate farm production.

Labor leaders have opposed rigid wage restrictions, pointing to higher living costs and asserting employers were making big profits.

Business spokesmen asserted profits were heading sharply downward and promised to sink further on the basis of new taxes already approved by the House of Representatives and being debated by the Senate.

(Estimates of corporation profits vary, but they are at record levels before taxes. The National Association of Manufacturers estimated income of manufacturing corporations this year, after taxes based on the House-approved rates, would be $4,590,000,000, off about 26 per cent from 1941, but 14 per cent above 1939.)

How will this tug of conflicting interests be resolved?

Henderson, in a recent speech, suggested some answers. He said farm income in 1942 would approximate 15 billion dolars, an increase of nearly 75 per cent from 1939, and added "increases of that sort in the income of any one group must not continue."

On the subject of wages he was equally emphatic, pointing out that while wages and salaries had increased $1,200,000,000 a month during the last year, "the cost of living has not even begun to catch up."

While the actual increase in wage and salary payments has been 30 per cent, he said, even allowing for higher costs of living, the purchasing power of weekly earnings was up 11 per cent.

Of corporation profits, Henderson said:

"A program which is fair . . . demands that the profits of business accuring either to individuals or to corporations must, through taxes, be cut back into line with the increases in farm prices and in wage payments to workers."

He called for sacrifices by all three groups—farm, labor, business.

But, however heavily any group or interest is tapped, through taxes or lending to the Government, the arithmetic of the national income determines where the money exists and where Uncle Sam will have to go to get it in quantities.

The magazine Fortune, using $112,000,800,000 as this year's national income, shows as its top item $76,300,000,000 for wages and salaries.

On this basis, the big operation in pulling back excess spending money is expected to come in the long run in the wage and salary total, whether it be done by taxes, war bond sales or some other means.

Regardless of how the excess is soaked up, more rigid price controls are expected because of what the war is doing to civilian production.

But Henderson, and others, insist there is little prospect of keeping the price lid on if there are too many billions of spending money with no place to go.

Background of the Problem

Increasing grocery bills, increasing scarcity of things you have the money to buy but can't find in the stores, increasing tax bills, price fixing—these are warning signs that the disease of inflation is spreading through the national economy.

The President is going to talk to the people about inflation, Leon Henderson has talked about it, Congress is worried about it, economists are worried about it.

What is inflation? Here is the answer, stripped of technicalities, and here are the proposed remedies. This story, by Claude A. Jagger, Wide World financial editor, will give you the background for understanding of President Roosevelt's message to the people, which will be delivered on Labor Day.

War Contractors Hindered by Lack Of Machine Tools

New York, Sept. 2 (AP).—The trade magazine American Machinist today said that war contractors still lacked machine tools.

Shortages of materials like steel have overshadowed the situation, but contractors' schedules have been set back in some cases by inability to get tools, the publication said.

Difficulties were attributed to machine tool builders having trouble obtaining materials to maintain capacity production and failing, in recent alignment of preference classifications, to receive high ratings previously possessed, the magazine added.

American Magazine said production in July topped June, declined in August and might be adversely affected the next month or two by materials shortages.

Business is not evenly divided in the industry, some companies having orders to keep them busy for 12 to 18 months, while others seek them for the immediate future, the publication added.

Slight Increase Noted in Gasoline, Fuel Oil Stocks

New York, Sept. 2 (AP).—Total stores of gasoline and fuel oil supplies decreased in the week ended August 29, the American Petroleum Institute reported today.

Finished and unfinished stocks of gasoline were up 388,000 barrels to 80,831,000, compared with 80,443,000 the previous week and 80,394,000 a year ago.

Distillates, or light fuel oils, advanced 1,644,000 barrels to 42,060,000, while residual (heavy) fuel oils increased 27,000 to 78,034,000.

Refining companies operated at 77 per cent of potential capacity, while the daily average of crude runs to stills declined 26,000 barrels to 3,697,000 against 77.6 per cent and 3,723,000 the previous week. A year ago the total was 4,133,000.

Daily average United States crude oil production decreased 7,350 barrels to 3,964,350, compared with 4,004,700 a year ago.

Total estimated gasoline production was 11,300,000 barrels against 22,550,000 last week.

OPA to Allow Apple Canners To Boost Prices

By the Associated Press

The Office of Price Administration announced yesterday it would permit apple processors to increase their minimum prices for canned apples, applesauce, apple juice, cider and dried apples.

The adjustments, OPA said, will cover increased raw fruits and other costs and will follow previous modifications of the ceiling prices for other canned and dried fruits.

OPA will permit canners to advance their 1941 prices on canned apples and applesauce a total of 18¼ per cent. Ten per cent of this increase is to cover cost increases other than raw fruit and 8¼ per cent is for added raw material cost.

OPA said the increase had been calculated so that canners would be able to pay $6.50 more per ton on the average for canning apples than was paid during the 1941 season. OPA said growers' costs of producing and harvesting apples had advanced substantially.

For apple juice and sweet cider an increase of 8 per cent over the 1941 price was allowed in order to cover costs other than fruit, when containers of one gallon or more are packed, and 10 per cent when containers smaller than one gallon are packed. Also an addition of 6 cents per gallon is allowed for these products to offset higher raw material prices. Canners may add an additional 2 per cent of their 1941 price when they use glass instead of tin for packing, as well as the difference in cost between the glass and tin containers. The 2 per cent is allowed for added cost of labor in glass packing.

OPA said an announcement would be made later regarding maximum prices for distributers and retailers of these apple products.

Fighting the War On Trade Front

The War Production Board reduced to 10,000 a month yesterday the number of bicycles which may be manufactured and centered production in two plants to free the remainder of the industry to produce war weapons.

The 10,000-a-month production represents only 20 per cent of the already greatly curtailed production permitted in July and August, when the maximum was 50,000 for each month. During the preceding three months the monthly production was 63,000, representing 42 per cent of the 1941 rate of production. The new limit is only 6 2-3 per cent of the 1941 production rate.

The Westfield Manufacturing Co., Westfield, Mass., was authorized to produce 6000 bicycles a month and the Hoffman Manufacturing Co., Dayton, Ohio, 4000 a month.

The two companies will produce the so-called victory model, a light weight bicycle using a minimum of critical materials.

The War Production Board has started an investigation into abuses of the new super-priority ratings by a considerable number of war contract holders.

Some companies operating under the production requirements plan have been using AA-1 and AA-2 priorities to obtain quick delivery of materials for the improvement, expansion or construction of their own plants, WPB's compliance branch said.

These so-called "double A" priorities, under a change in priority procedure adopted in June, are reserved for a secret list of military end-products to be completed within a specified length of time.

War costs in August set a new record of $4,882,498,435. This was a pace of about $158,000,000 per day, and indicated that September would fulfill the Budget Bureau's estimates of a $5,000,000,000 a month.

The August total, as reported by the Treasury yesterday, compared with $4,494,460,686 in July and $1,129,557,189 in August of last year. Additional war costs disbursed through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation were not included.

Adding other Government costs the Treasury spent in August a total of $5,215,417,813. The public debt went to a new peak of $86,277,118,-919.

The Office of Price Administration yesterday established dollars-and-cents ceiling prices for four "war models" of wood-frame coil bed springs.

Generally, the prices specified reflect October, 1941, prices for steel frame models with the additional material and production costs resulting from substitution of wood frames for steel in compliance with War Production Board limitation orders.

Pooling of all refrigerator cars to forestall any shortage for the handling of perishable food supplies was announced yesterday by the Office of Defense Transportation.

Under the pooling plan refrigerator cars controlled by one railroad system where a surplus exists could be forwarded to a competitive line for loading.

Meanwhile ODT Director Joseph B. Eastman predicted "smooth movement of war freight" despite the fact that the Nation's railroads face the heaviest movement of traffic in history.

Operation of a traffic channels system, he said, made it possible to prevent congestion serious enough to offer any real impediment to the handling of war freight.

Under the system the railroads submit daily data indicating threatened bottlenecks.

"At the first sign of congestion," Eastman said, "cooperative action with the railroads involved makes it possible to prevent serious trouble. If necessary, traffic can be diverted around the congested area.

Specialties Push Forward; General List Continues Indecisive, Colorless Moves

New York, Sept. 2.—A few specialties provided action in today's stock market as most leaders continued an indecisive and colorless performance.

Buyers paid substantially higher prices for Electric Power & Light and American Power & Light preferred, Cuban-American Sugar, Eastman Kodak, Vanadium Corporation, Dupont and Allied Chemical.

Steels, motors and aircrafts lacked leadership qualities and their final changes were negligible. Market experts derived a grain of comfort from the list's stability through the recent days of mounting tension over the battle trends in Russia and Egypt.

Final gains of 1 to 3 points in the Electric Power & Light-American Power & Light senior issues were associated with stories from some Wall Street sources suggesting they had been oversold on last week's SEC ruling of dissolution!

Cuban-American Sugar pushed up a point on announcement of a 50-cent dividend, or double the previous payment. Like improvement in Vanadium Corporation was attributed to news of the Senate Finance Committee's vote to exempt from the excess profits tax the returns from mining of eight vital metals, including vanadium.

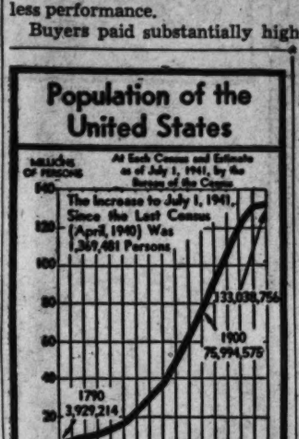
The Associated Press 60-stock average had a closing advance of one-tenth of a point, at 36.8. Transactions totaled 269,640 shares, against 291,320 Tuesday.

Minor advances were rather widely distributed at the finish, in contrast with the market's spottiness in the earlier proceedings. In the plus orbit were U. S. Steel, Republic, U. S. Rubber, Sears-Roebuck, Anaconda, Westinghouse, Johns-Manville, Western Union and U. S. Gypsum. On the off side were Bethlehem Steel, Woolworth, United Aircraft, Sperry, American Can, Santa Fe and American Telephone.

Commodities still dominated by promised Federal anti-inflation moves were a bit soft. Chicago wheat closed unchanged to off ⅜ of a cent a bushel and corn was down ¾ to up ⅛. Cotton futures gave up 50 to 85 cents a bale.

Bonds were irregular.

Electric Bond & Share preferred edged up 4 points in the curb. American Light & Traction, Creole Petroleum and Republic Aviation made small progress and Penn-Central Airlines, Gulf Oil and International Petroleum fell back. Dealings here were 49,510 shares, compared with 50,130 the day before.



Ration Coupon Banking Plan Is Proposed

Establishment of a "coupon banking plan" to tighten control over vital materials and over "widespread rationing of commodities," which they saw as inevitable, was suggested yesterday by economists of the Department of Commerce.

Ration coupons, they said, soon may be placed "almost on a par with money."

Use of the banking system to control rationing and flow of materials would be modeled after the current British system.

New Field for Banks

"Because of the many similarities between coupons and money, existing financial institutions, particularly our banking system . . . could serve a valuable function in the matter of ration coupon transfer and accounting," a Commerce Department statement said.

"Control of distribution by coupons, it is pointed out, goes far beyond the retail transaction . . . Each coupon is transferred a minimum of four times—to retailer, to wholesaler, to refinery (in case of sugar), to OPA—and at each stage the possibility of loss, theft, forgery and disputes is present."

Explaining that in England merchants maintain "coupon accounts" with banks, the economists suggested "the flow of raw materials . . . could perhaps be most easily controlled and checked through the regular banking system."

How It Works

"In the case of copper, for example," the statement said, "the estimated production for a given period could be allocated to the various users. The allocation would take the form of a 'copper deposit account' established to the credit of the user and against which the user could write 'copper checks to the extent of his deposit. Each copper order would have to be accompanied by such a check or warrant.

"Such a system . . . could provide not only a mechanism through which control could be exercised over the flow of raw materials, but also through the clearing of the warrants, a check on compliance."

Penn. Gets 18,000 Tons Of Steel Scrap a Month

New York, Sept. 2 (AP).—The Pennsylvania Railroad is shipping from 18,000 to 20,000 tons of steel scrap to the Nation's steel mills each month as a result of intensive salvage and reclamation activities, the company announced today.

Most of the metal is being gathered at the Conway and Altoona, Pa., plants. In addition to the metal turned in for the war effort, the railroad has picked up 3000 to 4000 tons of various material each month which it can use, thus eliminating the necessity of going to market for some new equipment.

Investors Approve Empire Gas Plan

New York, Sept. 2 (AP).—Preferred stockholders of Empire Gas & Fuel Corp. have approved by a substantial margin a recapitalization plan sanctioned by the Securities & Exchange Commission involving an exchange of the publicly held shares for new 3½ per cent sinking fund debentures.

Should the plan become operative all present interests and holdings of Cities Service Co. in Empire Gas would be subordinated to the new debentures.

Power Output Shows Slight Dip in Week

New York, Sept. 2 (AP).—The Edison Electric Institute reported today electric power production dropped to 3,639,961,000 kilowatt-hours in the week ended August 29 from the previous week's record high.

Output for the week, however, continued well above a year ago, 11.6 per cent more than the 3,261,-149,000 kilowatt-hours of the comparable 1941 period.

Interstate Stores Net Drops; Sales Increase

New York, Sept. 2 (AP).—Interstate Department Stores, Inc., reported today its sales in the first six months of 1942 totaled $16,151,-151, compared with $13,829,367 in the first half of last year, an increase of 16.79 per cent.

Net earnings for the period were set at $338,256 against adjusted net earnings of $358,875 in the comparable 1941 six months. Earnings per share were not available.

Cities Service Top Unit Under SEC Scalpel

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia, Sept. 2.—The Securities and Exchange Commission today instituted proceedings against the Cities Service Power and Light Co. and six of its direct or indirect subsidiaries to determine whether they conform to corporate simplification provisions of the Holding Company Act.

The order, which set October 6 for a hearing, is the second action by the SEC involving Cities Service Co., parent firm of Power & Light, a top subholding company in the Cities Service utilities system.

Today's order, however, is aimed directly at Power and Light which has 55 direct and indirect subsidiaries in 18 States and Canada, and concerns Cities Service only to the extent of its security holdings in Power and Light. A SEC spokesman pointed out the order does not involve nonutility holdings of Cities Service. Power & Light has assets of $428,727,463.

Steel Payrolls Hit New High in July

New York, Sept. 2 (AP).—Payrolls in the steel industry attained a new high in July at $120,671,000, nearly $2,000,000 above the previous top of $118,890,000 established in October, 1941, the American Iron & Steel Institute announced today.

The total compared with $118,067,-000 in June and $114,059 in July, 1941.

The average number of workers in July was 655,000, compared with 659,000 in June and 648,000 a year ago. Wage earning employes averaged 102.7 cents an hour in July, a new high, and compared with 102 cents in June and 99.1 cents last year.

Wage earners averaged 38.4 hours per week in July against 38.7 in June and 37.8 a year ago.

One Way to Do It

At Great Bend, Kans., a draftee, incensed because his petition for a deferment had been rejected, reached out of the train window as he departed and bashed his draft board chairman over the head, injuring his hat and his dignity.

The draftee got his deferment—six months in jail.

And No Wound Stripes

Topeka, Kans., (AP).—L. D. McClain, Topeka barber, encamped last week with the State Guard, in which he is a sergeant. It gave him an idea.

Now he's passing out business cards reading: "Servicemen's barber shop. Army haircuts repaired."

The Federal Diary

tralized agency lost 50 per cent of its employes. Patent Office lost about 18 per cent. Of the 1089 jobs moved to Richmond, 907 employes from Washington went to fill those jobs. During the seven months the office has been in Richmond, 130 have either resigned or have transferred to agencies with a higher priority rating, 65 have entered military service, and nine have been transferred back to Washington. More than 300 persons in and nearby Richmond have been hired to fill vacancies.

The agency, however, has a serious personnel problem. It needs technically-trained examiners, about 140 of them. It hasn't been able to hire them with the agency in Richmond and many believe the problem wouldn't have been nearly so critical if the office had been kept in Washington. The war conceivably could be lengthened through the delay in examining war patents.

For example, the important ordnance and aeronautical divisions are now 10 months behind in their work. And that means if an all-important plane patent—one that would help our side win this war months sooner—had been filed with the office at the time of Pearl Harbor it would be another two months before the examining division could get around to it. Moreover, it would be another two months before Commissioner Conway Coe could issue a military secrecy order to the inventor to keep the Axis from getting wind of the invention.

War Work Hampered

Decentralization of the Patent Office greatly hampered its vital war work. On August 15 the agency had 44,900 cases on its hands awaiting action. It's true that this number is about the same as it was a year ago, but applications have declined about 15 per cent compared to a year ago and the office would have been able to clean up a substantial part of the backlog if it had its normal complement of 700 examiners. Yesterday 560 were on the payroll. Half a dozen retired examiners are being reinstated. Many other retired employes would have gone back to work had the agency remained in Washington and still others wouldn't have retired if the agency hadn't moved to Richmond.

On the other hand the transfer brought the employes much closer together. It has given them a real community spirit. The employes take over two large Richmond bowling alleys one night each week. Plans are afoot for a Patent Office Club where employes may go for recreation. The renovated tobacco warehouse is a much better office building than they had been led to expect. It doesn't compare with Commerce Department offices but it's far better than any temporary building in Washington.

Fried Chicken for 25 Cents

The cafeteria serves substantial meals at modest prices. A feature is Southern fried chicken luncheon at 25 cents. Yesterday the cafeteria substituted baked turkey—white meat. Yet some of the employes believe it's just as expensive as living in Washington. Rents, they say, are somewhat lower but the accommodations are not so good.

The employes, however, are still puzzled why the Patent Office, one of the oldest Federal agencies, was forced to leave Washington. They insist that the full story has never been told. They can't believe the move was on the level. Also, they haven't forgotten the fact that they were rushed out of Washington within a few weeks so their offices in the modern Commerce Building could be turned over to employes of Nelson Rockefeller's Office of Inter-American Affairs and Vice President Henry Wallace's Board of Economic Warfare. And neither have they forgotten that their vacated offices lay unoccupied for two months while more money was spent to renovate the modern Commerce offices than it cost to convert the ramshackle tobacco warehouse into an office building.

Warm Welcome Received

The employes are now glad they moved when they did, as long as they had to move. Richmond wasn't as crowded in late January as it is now and prices weren't as high then. Ultra-modern lighting and other improvements were installed in the building which wouldn't have been possible a few months later. Just about everything has been done to make the empolyes comfortable.

Richmond and its people gave the Patent Office an enthusiastic welcome and you can bet that the city will make every effort to help the agency when the war is over. Only one controversial incident occurred. Commissioner Coe ordered the drab warehouse painted white and Richmonders insisted that the building would be a target for Axis raiders. The outburst died a natural death when no one was able to detect the building from the sky during an air-raid test. The University of Richmond has inaugurated late evening law classes for patent examiners.

Staff of 375 in D. C.

The Patent Office maintains a staff of 375 employes in Washington and the interchange of information between the two offices is an enormous job. A ton of material daily is exchanged between Richmond and Washington. Two large trucks handle the traffic. A station wagon takes officials between the two offices. Government Printing Office continues to handle the office's huge printing job which amounts to about $800,000 annually and keeps 400 printers at GPO busy.

Transfer of the Patent Office released 423 family dwelling units and 232 single units in Washington. More than 100 employes have kept their families in Washington for the day when they'll return.

Arnold to Preside In Loudoun Court

Richmond, Va., Sept. 2 (AP).—Justice George L. Browning, State Supreme Court of Appeals, today designated Robert W. Arnold, judge of the Third Judiciol Circuit, Waverly, to preside in the Circuit Court of Loudoun County, beginning September 9, in place of Judge J. R. H. Alexander, who is unable to preside because of conflicting official engagements.

PBA Plans To Provide Raid Shelters

Codes Are Drawn To Protect Buildings Against Bombing And Sabotage

Simultaneous with the announcement of "comprehensive measures to protect Federal buildings throughout the Nation against air raid hazards and sabotage," it was learned yesterday that the Public Buildings Administration has made plans to provide air raid shelters where none exist for Government buildings located in areas of "extreme hazard" which are "unquestionably essential for supporting the active prosecution of the war."

It also was learned that the District is located in an area of "extreme hazard," according to PBA's classification; that most Government buildings in Washington are either essential to the war or support the war, and that appropriate shelters will have to be built for a number of temporary buildings here.

Plans to construct the air raid shelters already are being drawn with some construction expected to start in the near future.

Two Protection Codes

The measures to protect the buildings against air raid dangers and sabotage are contained in two comprehensive protection codes which have just been completed by interdepartmental committees headed by W. E. Reynolds, commissioner of public buildings.

The codes divide all Government buildings into four priority classifications based on their function. The classification which will determine the extent to which Federal buildings will receive special protection agaist both air raids and sabotage follow:

"I. War activities, principal—those activities unquestionably essential to the active prosecution of the war.

"II. War activities, supporting—those activities necessary to support the active prosecution of the war.

"III. War activities, subordinate—those activities indirectly related to the prosecution of the war.

"IV. Other activities including all other Government functions."

Regions of "Extreme Hazard"

A region 200 miles deep on each coast and 100 miles wide on the country's Southern border has been designated as one of "extreme hazard" by PBA in line with definitions contained in the codes. A second strip still to be outlined within the first area will be designated as "dangerous." A third strip will be classified as of "moderate" hazard with a fourth strip as of "contributing" hazard. The remainder of the country is regarded as safe from air raids.

According to the codes, the most stringent precautions including the building of shelters where none is available will be taken for Government buildings located in "extreme" and "dangerous" areas which house principal war activities. Buildings housing supporting war activities in "extreme" areas will be similarly protected.

All other buildings in the "extreme" area and most other buildings in the "dangerous" area will receive substantial protection, but less complete than the protection to be afforded those more essential to the war. More moderate regulations are provided in the still less hazardous zones.

Shelter Design Suggested

The air raid code states that new shelters are "justifiable only when there are no other means of giving protection to personnel such as the inner portions of multi-story fireproof buildings provide." The code contains a suggested design for a shelter to stand "close near misses of large high explosive bonds." However, it cautioned against construing the code as an immediate invitation to all building officials to start building shelters.

It is understood that PBA officials believe that a number of Washington temporary buildings which would be useless as shelters by themselves will require shelters.

The codes are the result of several months of study by the two committees. They call for extreme precautions against sabotage in blackouts. All empolyes are asked to report promptly any suspicious activity by others in the building and provision is made for a character examination of guards who have entered the Government service since January, 1938.

The codes will apply to an estimated 20,000 buildings. PBA will initiate its protective program under a $12,500,000 appropriation for that purpose from Congress.

Rush May Cause Holiday Changes, Pullman Co. Warns

Civilians who plan to travel by Pullman car over the Labor Day weekend were cautioned yesterday that last-minute adjustments, involving the use of a later or earlier train, may be necessary and that they should make their plans accordingly.

Pullman's first call, according to David A. Crawford, president of the Pullman Co., is to facilitate the movement of troops—already five times heavier than a year ago. In addition, a steadily increasing amount of civilian travel is further taxing sleeping-car facilities.

Because of these two factors, the Pullman Co. has announced that on some occasions—and Labor Day holiday likely will be one of those occasions—the car supply will not be enough to meet both military and civilian requirements. Persons planning a trip are advised to consult travel agents for definite information.

Post-War Planning to Hinge On World Markets, Justice Says

Supreme Court Justice Robert H. Jackson told delegates to the International Student Assembly last night the next "New Order" must be one of "broadened rights of access to the world's markets" in which effective legal restraints would be placed upon the criminal elements which foment war.

"This war will not be over on the day an order is given to cease fire. If we are to make good the promise of an international society in which force will be under law, which will insure broadened rights of access to the world's raw materials, and if we are to stop the exploitation of people through the practices of the old imperialisms, there will be struggles aplenty," he said.

Justice Jackson spoke at the Departmental Auditorium at the opening of a four-day meeting of delegates from all the anti-Axis nations.

"The dignity of no well-meaning state would be harmfully impaired even by a requirement that it submit justifiable grievances to a world court and others to arbitration," he said. "No greater task challenges a bold and progressive generation than to so organize the scattered forces of the world that they may be brought to the support of its moral judgments and to implement well-meant pledges with sanctions which make them really law."

"Certain concepts and doctrines operate to sanctify and perpetuate the sort of anarchy that now envelops the world," the Justice said. These he listed as (1) the doctrine that a sovereign state can submit to no limitation upon its right to go to war, (2) the precept that neutral states may not judge a war-making sovereign but must accept war as legal and treat it as just, and (3) the principle that bystanding states must either remain rigidly impartial or join the war.

Charles A. Thomson, chief of the division of cultural relations, Department of State, told delegates that the work of the International Student Service "is a valuable means toward international cooperation in this troubled present and an encouraging promise for planned and united effort in upbuilding the world beyond the war."

Highlight of the institute will be an address at noon today by President Roosevelt.

Earlier the assembly heard United States Commissioner of Education John W. Studebaker assert that America's role "in establishing the new and better world order will be as much spiritual as it is material.

"War may remove certain obstacles for the attainment of this better world, but war itself cannot create good will and freedom and true democracy," he said. "It is to the liberal disciplines of the schools and colleges that we must look for development of persons fit for freedom."

Attending the assembly are more than 350 youths from 53 countries including the United Nations and the anti-Nazi societies of Germany and Italy. Many of the delegates, including women, were in uniform, and some already have seen action in the war.

They included Lludmila Pavlichenko, woman lieutenant of the Russian army who is credited with killing 309 Germans; Wing Commander Scott Malden, who led a patrol in the recent Dieppe raid; and Johannes E. Woltjer, Dutch student who took part in the Netherlands East Indies battle and the fight against Nazi invasion of Holland.

Proposing an anti-Fascist movement in the form of a Free Italian legation are three delegates who told the assembly that such a move would be "in patriotic accord with the majority of persons in Italy who wish nothing more than victory of the United Nations." They are Sforzino Sforza, son of Count Carlo Sforza, leader of Free Italians abroad; Cesare Lombroso, grandson of the famous Italian criminologist of the same name, and Bruno Zevi, editor of Ouadaini Italiani, anti-Fascist publication.

Two Drivers Sentenced in Auto Deaths

One Motorist Gets Fine of $100, Second Draws Year's Probation

Judge Nathan R. Margold of Municipal Court yesterday passed sentence in two cases involving charges of negligent homicide in traffic deaths, and heard a jury verdict of guilty in a third.

A fine of $100 was imposed on Charles Joseph Di Virgilio, 28, of Marshalltown, Del., after he pleaded guilty to a charge of causing the death of 13-year-old Allen Mitchell Kennedy, of 2434 Franklin Street Northeast, on October 31, 1941.

The boy was killed on Bladensburg Road about 100 feet from the District line, when Di Virgilio's car hit a pole and then struck the youth, throwing him 43 feet into a vacant lot.

Judge Margold imposed a sentence of one year's probation in the case of Styles E. Woodruff, jr., who was convicted August 24 on a charge of negligent homicide in the death of Harry J. Bender, 73, of 1010 Douglas Street Northeast. Bender died at Casualty Hospital December 27, 1940, the day after he was struck by Woodruff's car as he was crossing at Twelfth and Franklin Streets Northeast.

Later yesterday, a jury returned a verdict of guilty against Walter E. Basye, 18, of 3239 North Washington Boulevard, Arlington, in connection with the traffic death of a 70-year-old woman May 16, 1941.

The victim, Maria Herndon of 1414 Twenty-seventh Street Northwest was struck as she was crossing Pennsylvania Avenue at Twenty-sixth Street Northwest.

Meanwhile an 89-year-old woman and a 2-months-old Negro baby were treated for minor injuries last night as a result of separate traffic accidents.

The woman, Miss Margaret Oldham of 1818 Newton Street Northwest (the Presbyterian Home), received head lacerations and face contusions when she reportedly fell in front of a Capital Transit streetcar while crossing Fourteenth Street at Park Road at 7:45 p. m. Operator of the car was William D. Myers, 31, of 3611 Eleventh Street Northwest. Miss Oldham's condition was described as not serious at the Emergency Hospital.

At about the same time a taxi driven by George F. Casey of 1338 New York Avenue Northwest collided with a baby carriage while driving north on Fourteenth Street. Phyllistine Anne Conway, occupant of the carriage, was treated at Garfield Hospital by Dr. James J. Kurtz for slight abrasions and sent home. The baby was with its mother, Mrs. Arline Conway of 1018 Lamont Street Northwest.

Playground Contest Winners Announced

Winners of the annual summer backyard playground contest sponsored by the Child Traffic Safety Council were announced yesterday by the council, but prizes will not be presented until after Labor Day, it was said.

Billy Middleton, 10, son of Mr. and Mrs. William T. Middleton of 3194 Westover Drive Southeast, was chosen winner of first prize in the homemade equipment group. Billy, who will receive his prize—a sliding board—with the others from the Junior Board of Commerce, had a set of horizontal bars, a fireplace and swings.

Second place in this group was awarded Beverly Anne Foy, 10, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Foy of 2220 S Street Northeast. She will receive a wading pool and shower combined.

Third place went to Mrs. Raymond Betz, who submitted entry for her small children, of 4222 Thirty-seventh Street Northwest. Mrs. Betz will receive a play tent for her playground.

Mrs. R. M. Crawley of 5214 Ames Street Northeast was awarded fourth place and will get a sand box for her family. Ernest Kendall of 6021 Third Street Northwest took fifth place and will get a see-saw.

Charles Peck, 10, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Peck of 50 Franklin Street Northeast, will receive a sliding board for taking first place in the purchased playground equipment group. His playground had, among other things, a large furnished playhouse.

Corresponding prizes will be given to the following winners in this group: Gullon Court Apartments, 1815 P Street Southeast, second place; Mrs. Lawrence N. C. Smith of 3230 Resevoir Road Northwest, third place; Roderick Dunhanery of 5336 East Capitol Street, fourth place, and Jerome Johnson of 307 Tenth Street Southeast, fifth place.

Old Inhabitants Fete Heurich Soon to Mark 100th Birthday

NEARING 100 YEARS—Christian Heurich (left), who will be 100 years old September 12, was honored last night by the Association of Oldest Inhabitants, of which he is vice president. The venerable brewer is shown with Dr. John Clagett Proctor, acting president, at the party in the Old Union Engine House

Christian Heurich, whose main ambition in life always has been "to be an honor to my mother and father," is getting ready to chalk up another birthday—September 12 will mark the hundredth—and so last night the Association of Oldest Inhabitants, whose vice president he is, pitched in with a profusion of praise, flowers and music to tell Washington's venerable brewer just how they feel about him.

They told him that his life had been an inspiration to them all; they praised his modesty, his reliance on and faith in the simpler virtues; they recalled that he came up the hard way and wished for the world of today more of the unceasing toil that laid the foundation of his character, and, without exception, they denied him full credit for all of his accomplishments—it must be shared, they said, with his wife.

Roper Speaks

In fact, Daniel C. Roper, former Secretary of Commerce, said Christian Heurich's marriage to the gracious smiling woman who sat by his side throughout the program was one of the two major events of his life. The other, said the erstwhile Cabinet member, was when he left Germany, his homeland, and came to the United States in 1866.

Charles H. Bates made the only formal speech of the evening.

Throughout the program, which was held in the Old Union Firehouse at Nineteenth and H Streets Northwest, Heurich sat erect and dignified. When Francesco Della-Lana concluded a tenor solo, "For You Alone," and handed the guest of honor a gorgeous yellow rose, he accepted the floral gift and nodded his appreciation to the singer.

Difficulty at hearing appear to be his only physical problem today. His son, Chris Heurich, jr., said his father still goes daily to his office to direct his far-flung brewing enterprise and still personally selects the malt and hops which go into his beer.

Son Reads Statement

It was Chris Heurich who read his father's statement of appreciation—a pleasure which the elder Heurich had to forego because, as he explained, the day of making speeches was over for him.

In the statement, Heurich recalled his youth in Germany.

He traced the growth of the machine age as encompassed in the span of his life, called the radio "the greatest invention of all," and recommended to his friends the compositions of Richard Wagner, whom he met in 1882.

The war, he said, will set us back several years in the field of mechanical invention, and at its conclusion we will have to make many "adjustments" in our personal lives.

He thanked them all for their tributes and the warmth of their friendship.

At the conclusion of the program, moving pictures in color of the Heurich country estate, Bellevue, were screened with John Clagett Proctor, acting president, serving as narrator.

More than 100 persons attended the affair, among them Maj. Ernest W. Brown, former superintendent of police, and Judge William E. Richardson, chief justice of the Municipal Court, who submitted an application for membership.

Further Additions to D. C. Hospital Facilities Promised

Washington will be provided with new hospital facilities in excess of the 550 new beds presently planned, the Federal Works Agency promised yesterday.

At a roundtable conference on the city's acute hospital shortage, called by Chairman McCarran of the Senate District Committee, three sources of these extra beds were brought forward:

1. Conversion of nurses' homes into emergency hospitals and the construction of temporary dormitories to house the nurses.

2. Clinics and hospital rooms which are to be built into the dormitories for Government workers, sufficient to meet the needs of each dormitory's tenants.

3. Possible additions, or temporary annexes, at Garfield, Casualty and Columbia Hospitals.

Promises Immediate Checkup

Baird Snyder, assistant FWA administrator, said that he would begin an immediate investigation of the possible conversion of the nurses' homes, which would provide an estimated total of 200 extra beds. Georgetown, Sibley and Emergency Hospitals were cited as institutions where such a replacement might be made. Material shortages, Snyder said, had seriously curtailed construction of new buildings.

Representatives of all local hospitals attended the session, presenting figures on the District's hospital needs. Their testimony showed that not only were almost all of the institutions carrying capacity loads now, but that complicating personnel and equipment problems also were arising.

Dr. F. J. Eisenman of Garfield and others disclosed that many of the institutions were having great difficulties in maintaining adequate staffs, because employes and nurses were leaving for Government or better-paying jobs. Moreover, they said that in many cases lack of adequate housing for nurses was interfering with the increase in nurse training programs called for by Federal authorities.

Others testified that medical equipment, most of it utilizing the most critical of materials, was becoming almost impossible to get.

Maternity Facilities Needed

The greatest current need, the hospital heads said, was for more facilities for maternity cases. They pointed out that the number of such cases was increasing rapidly and that facilities were sorely limited.

Snyder admitted that his agency had been slow in getting the hospital program under way, but said that it would move much faster now that the bulky preliminary work was done.

Dr. George C. Ruhland, District Health Officer, also appeared, asserting that a total of 1000 new beds was needed to protect the city adequately. This number, he said, was needed to meet only the "normal" situation, aside from any emergency condition which might be created by a bombing.

The FWA's original plans called for the construction of facilities for 1700 new beds in the Metropolitan area, but this was cut down to 550 under a program approved Tuesday.

It was to determine whether this reduced number woud be adequate and to see what steps could be taken to increase the allotment that yesterday's session was called by McCarran.

Navy Beans Make Sea Dogs Forget Meatless Day at Cafe

Maybe it was those beans—baked Navy style—which did the trick, but at any rate Miss Alice Goddard, manager of the cafeteria at the Navy Department, said she had an excellent reception of the meatless Wednesday edict which was put into effect for the first time yesterday.

Miss Goddard faced the prospects of some grousing and growling from the seadogs who patronize the cafeteria at the Navy Department when she followed orders and cut all meat from the menu for the day.

She has seen sea-farin' men eat and she knows all about their appetities.

"We had only one request for steak and I think that was done just to tease," she explained.

But then there was nothing to quarrel about when she offered as substitutes a choice of creamed mushrooms on toast, rice croquettes, egg cutlets or macaroni and cheese, her customers said.

Miss Goddard said that the majority of her customers were men and she felt the test at her cafeteria would be the crucial one for the meatless Wednesday plan in Government buildings.

At the same time Mrs. E. Whitmore, in charge of the cafeteria at the Social Security Building, where most of the customers are women, found the same reaction to the meatless day there. She also offered tempting meat substitutes.

"There was but one difficulty," she explained." A large number of the customers could not distinguish between meat substitutes and just ordinary vegetables. Which, I suppose is easily understood."

The meatless edict was enforced in all of the 52 cafeterias operated by the Welfare and Recreation Association in Federal buildings.

The plan is being put into effect in an effort to conserve dwindling meat stocks in the East and will be continued indefinitely.

At none of the cafeterias was there reported any decrease in customers. Even that great national dish, ham 'n' eggs, failed to draw any growls when it appeared minus the senior partner of the combination at breakfast, cafeteria operators said.

Glenn Dale May Receive More Funds

Health Department Increases Estimate For Sanatorium By $165,296

By Roger Young
Post Staff Writer

Rising cost of food and supplies and the swelling population of the District led the Health Department to increase its 1944 budget estimate for Glenn Dale Sanitarium by $165,296—the largest increase in the entire $4,058,429 request.

Yet in the request for Gallinger Hospital, which is due for only $45,440 of the budget increase of $383,292, the Health Department retains the present figures for maintenance, saying that "no circumstances are foreseen that would justify an increase in the number of patients during the coming year" and that "assuming that prices remain approximately the same as may be brought about by ceilings, it would be expected that no significant increase in per patient cost of treatment would prevail in the coming fiscal year."

Additional personnel, including an assistant superintendent, two associate medical officers and two social service workers, and sharp reductions in subsistence deductions account for most of the Gallinger increase from $1,381,547 to $1,426,987.

Improved Food

An assistant superintendent, an assistant chief nurse, a physiotherapist, a dietitian and 10 ward attendants are among the additional personnel asked for the Glenn Dale institution. These salaries amount to $66,760, while $109,994 more is asked for maintenance, including improved food—the Health Department finally admitting that the present diet at Glenn Dale is "not so delectable."

Even though the Health Department anticipates no new patients at Gallinger, it asks for $18,800 more than the present $211,200 allotment for medical charities. This is to take care of additional indigents expected for District care at Children's and Casualty Hospitals.

This was asked even though Commissioner Guy Mason, who is responsible for the Health Department, announced some weeks ago that the future District policy would be to care for all the District indigents at Gallinger and not support them in private hospitals.

22 More Sanitary Inspectors

Health Officer George C. Ruhland said this policy depended upon building room for additional beds at Gallinger, and when reminded that the FWA on Tuesday had allocated the necessary funds, he commented that he would require "something more tangible than the FWA announcement" to be convinced.

Twenty-two new sanitary inspectors and 20 junior graduate nurses are the chief personnel additions asked for the medical services. The sanitary inspectors would be used for industrial hygiene, vermin control, housing, cosmetology, water and general inspection.

Maternal and Child Welfare

For maternal and child welfare, three new attending physicians and ten junior clinic aides are sought.

Because of the necessity for keeping records of all tuberculosis clinic cases, three additional file clerks are asked.

Again the Health Department requested funds to institute a mental hygiene clinic. The department wants $28,340 to employ a chief and assistant psychiatrist, a psychologist, five social workers and clerical help.

Two additional laboratory assistants are requested to aid in the preparation of serums and seriological tests. A 22 per cent increase in public health laboratory work is expected, including the taking of 500,000 blood tests, an increase of 100,000 over the current figure.

Rabies Increases

An additional veterinarian is requested in the Food Inspection section. Rabies, it seems, is increasingly prevalent; and with an increase in the last two years of 118 registered dairy farms, it was thought that one veterinarian should be employed to do nothing but rabies work, leaving the present staff free for dairy inspection.

For general administration, $34,011 more is asked, mostly to pay with District funds employes now being paid by Social Security.

Budget estimate for the Police Department for 1944 amounts to $4,008,382, and for the Fire Department, $2,266,072. The police request is only $56,400 more than the current appropriation, while that of the Fire Department is $44,018 less than this year's sum, because of the nonrecurring item of the construction of a fire house at North Capitol and Crittenden Streets.

The creation of the rank of police corporal to supplant the present "unsatisfactory" method of designating a private as acting sergeant when needed, would mean promotions for 65 privates from $2400 to $2600 per year and add $13,000 to the budget.

Besides these promotions, the Police Department asks for ten new sergeants, one inspector and one lieutenant. The inspector is to head the police training school and the lieutenant and sergeants would staff the police radio station. In-grade pay raises and additional clerical help are also listed in the personnel needs.

The fire department asks for 18 new men to staff the stationhouse planned for Twenty-eighth Place and Pennsylvania Avenue Southeast, but the overall personnel account is smaller due to the use of new men to replace higher-ranking officers now in the military forces.

One captain, one lieutenant, one sergeant and 15 privates, whose salaries will total $36,940, are asked for the new company, for which the apparatus is already on hand.

Handicraft Interest Is Revived

Precious symbols of yesterday and tender memories of by-gone days when quilting and rug making circles gathered in the satin sheen of walnut parlors, bedrooms of Victorian wallpaper and four poster beds or cosy dining rooms gleamed in old silver and pewter, are being recalled by women's new war interest in handicraft arts. The vogue for home handicrafts is fast growing on a national scale and is not only giving women a war time aid but offers employment, teaching and a business as well, points out the "Travelers Cheque" Survey Bureau of the American Express in their Survey Series of War News Sidelights.

Early New England which revived the handicraft arts of the Old World land of the spindle and loom, is famed for both craft articles and teaching when still winter nights and a full moon on a world of snow invited countryside folks to give practice to nimble fingers.

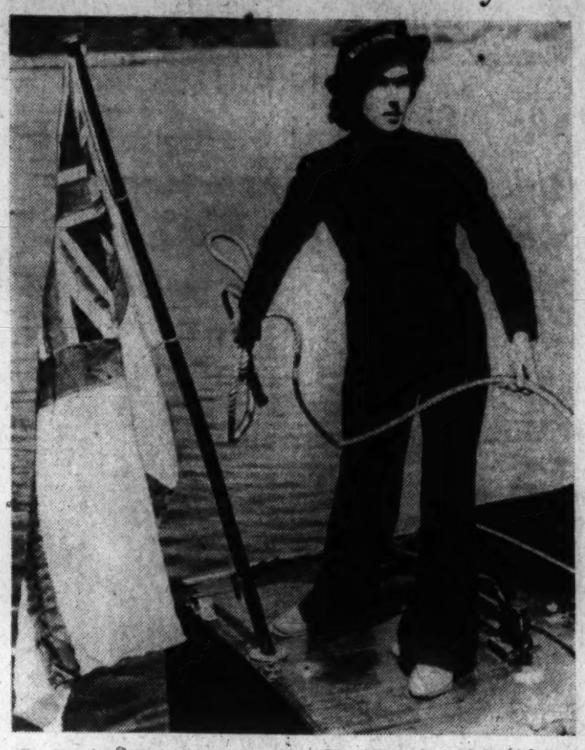
British Wrens Carry Secret Orders to the Convoys



By Marion Slater

London, Sept. 2 (By Cable).—I passed today with the only women who serve afloat with the British navy. These women of the Women's Royal Naval Service man motor launches for vital harbor work such as carrying secret orders to convoys, bringing casualties ashore after sea action, or men ashore from sea duty, and paying regular visits to stationary balloon-barrage vessels.

I went "on the job." I saw these "Wrens" are superbly efficient, re-background of gray sea, gray docks and green English cliffs. I saw their clear-cut, almost austere good looks, their smooth efficiency, their high sense of responsibility and their pride in being members of the British senior service.

These are not mere phrases. The "Wren" are superbly efficient, responsible and proud. Every naval officer I met had praise for them, and British naval standards are high. Most of them are between 18 and 24 years old. All are volunteers, carefully chosen for the work best suiting them.

Practical sea training is preceded by a course of intensive lectures. The women wear navy serge trousers, navy shirts, black ties and stormproof hats that have bands beneath the chins.

All have had previous experience in boats, though they come from varied professions. In peacetime these girls were artists, dietitians, stenographers, housewives or shop assistants. None is wistful over her previous job. Many wish their present work could continue in some form after the war. "This is the job for us," is a typical comment overheard wherever "Wrens" gather.

Pat Chadwick, 22, is the "Wren" bowman of a Royal Navy motorboat. She carries secret instructions concerning route, position and sailing times to the master of each of the merchant ships assembling for convoys. She hands the instructions up to the ship in a cleft stick and collects a receipt in a similar manner. She is liable to be called for duty at any hour of the day or night and gets tremendous satisfaction from her part in the convoy operations.

The "Wrens," on duty 24 hours and off 24 hours, man two hospital boats that bring casualties ashore after sea actions. Aptly named the Nightingale and Cavell, each of the boats can accommodate 18 casualties. Since naval actions are not a daily occurrence in the home waters, these ships are also used to bring men ashore on leave.

Other "Wrens" visit the balloon-barrage vessels. Engineer Juliet Parker used to work at the Royal Institute of International Affairs; Coxswain Mary Kately was formerly a dietitian; Bowman Mrs. Powlesland has a husband serving on a minesweeper; Sternsheetman Eleanor Head was a stenographer. Now they form the crew of a 12-ton, 25-horsepower boat. They keep its black corduroy-covered bunks scrupulously clean, cook lunch on a primus stove in the galley and do daily duty from 8 a. m. to 5 p. m.

The first "Wren" mechanic, Patricia O'Sullivan, is now responsible for the upkeep of a motorboat engine. She has a sister in the service; a brother in the Royal Navy who was recently awarded the O. B. E.; a 16-year-old brother also at sea, and her 27-year-old father is a chief engineer in the merchant navy who swears he'll not leave the sea until he has seen the war through. Many such seafaring families are represented in the "Wrens."

Policewomen Could Be In a Chorus

By Bess Stephenson

Detroit, Sept. 2 (INS).—The Hudson Navy Arsenal at Detroit has 13 women on its police staff who could get a hearing peacetime (and an eyeing) from Billy Rose.

They're all young, all tall and good-looking. They replaced 13 men on the plant protection staff who were called up by the Army recently. All were drawn from Detroit's Tiptop Club, which is composed exclusively of towering girls and towering escorts.

To belong to the Tiptop Club, a girl must be 5 feet 9 and a man 6 feet 1 or better. The members band together for height equality in their social life and for the purpose of pushing through a new deal in store-bought clothes for gals and guys who are taller than average. They avoid the penalty of out-size prices by pooling such things as their shoe and dress orders.

When the Navy Arsenal ran short of manpower for its plant protection staff they turned to women and therefore naturally to the Tiptop Club. They wanted tall women (gives them dignity and an air of authority) and here was a ready-made pool to draw from. Thirteen are hired and that many more on the waiting list. They are so new their uniforms haven't arrived yet. They now wear uniform navy-blue overseas caps, police badges and whistles. Eventually they will wear navy blue suits and may be inducted into the Coast Guard. Men in plant protection here are sworn into the Coast Guard the day they go to work. Sounds reasonable enough to them that the women might be, too.

The girl police force performs the customary duties of guard-escort. Anybody who comes into the Navy Arsenal, even employes on their day off, must have an escort from the moment he enters until he leaves. The tall girls, equipped with whistles in case of emergency, do the job of escorting. They even ride truckloads of gravel or sand that come into the arsenal yards.

In the Navy Arsenal, operated by Hudson Motor Co., the all-girl war production tour saw the largest and busiest machine shop of its kind encountered on the trip so far. Here are the machines which turn out more than 200 different small items for Navy use. Here also are the production lines for the Oerlikon antiaircraft gun.

S. G. Baits, vice president and general manager of Hudson's naval ordnance division, was joint host with Capt. A. C. Witherspoon to reporters on the tour.

See a Pin, Pick It Up

Save your pins and needles; make them last. The millions of pins and needles used in this country must come out of our wartime metal supply so vitally needed for war purposes.

Production of pins has been cut, the Consumer Division of the office of Price Administration pointed out today, but adequate stocks are available. You may have overlooked pins in the long list of articles recently placed under a ban by the War Production Board, but pins were one of the most important items. One-third of the straight pins and safety pins produced during the past two years were made of brass, which consists largely of copper. The rest were made of steel, but the steel supply for straight pins has been only 60 per cent of normal since June.

The armed forces and essential civilian industries, such as laundry, cleaning and garment-making establishments, get first call on the available supply of pins. So there won't be as many for household use.

There are enough needles to take care of our immediate needs, but we should take good care of those we have in order to conserve the supply. Most of our needles are made in this country.

Just What Is an Optimum Diet?

By Logan Clendening, M.D.

Last winter Dr. A. J. Carlson, professor of physiology at the University of Chicago, startled an audiance of medical students and scientists by saying, in the midst of all the discussion about improving the national nutrition: "Nobody on earth knows what an optimum diet is."

Startling, because everybody has been talking as if it were generally agreed exactly what the optimum human diet is.

What is the definition of an optimum diet? Well, it is a little more than an adequate diet. The medical dictionary defines optimum thus: "The temperature or other conditions at which vital processes are carried on with the greatest activity."

So an optimum diet is the diet with which vital processes are carried on with the greatest activity. An adequate diet maintains health. Thus you can keep healthy rats up to 30 generations in more than average activity and fertility on a diet which consists of one-sixth whole dried milk and five-sixths of ground whole wheat.

Increase the proportion of dried milk to one-third and there is a marked improvement in nutrition and positive health. Growth is more rapid and efficient, death rates are lower, the period of the prime of life is increased and fertility is greater. But as you keep adding food elements a place is reached where obesity and sluggishness appears, initiative and activity decrease. Somewhere in between is the theoretical "optimum diet."

No Exact Definition

We know in a general way what it is, but the scientific mind likes exact definition in mathematical terms and that we cannot give for the optimum diet.

A group of San Francisco dentists whom we quoted recently, Drs. Collins, Jensen and Beck, in the course of their experimental work, sent out a questionnaire to a number of nutritionists, physologists and clinicians trying to find out what the definitions and specifications of an optimum diet are.

A large number refused to attempt a definition, saying that on account of the incompleteness of the present knowledge of nutritional requiremnets a specific answer could not be written.

One research worker said, "If human beings were as uniform in familial and inheritance characters as a colony of rats, an optimum diet could be reliably appraised. But they are not. The optimum diet of the Eskimo is quite unlike that of the Negro in the bayous of Louisiana. One may find a myriad of varying tastes and digestive capacities which affect the utilization of diet."

In general, as I say, we know that a human being must have at least 50 grams of protein daily; from 2000 to 300 calories depending on his activity, and vitamins and minerals. So much milk, eggs, meat, grains, cereals, fruits and vegetables are the basic products which contain these chemical elements. But how much of the caloric intake should be supplied by carbohydrate, or fat, or protein, we do not know. Can you safely reduce the carbohydrate intake for the sake of the teeth? The exact answer is unknown.

Hairdos for High Hats

We have become a nation of shiny faces and well-brushed hair. Perhaps it's the military influence. Anyway, you will resemble a lost lady if your hair is anything but soft, shiny and natural looking, when you perch the new hat modes atop your head. The Pierrette inspiration in the black velvet sequin trimmed hat (above) with matching sequin bracelet attached by a wisp of a veil, has the perfect background with coiffure of sleek sides and sculptured curls piled high in back. At right, the lustrous hair do with soft rolled curls at the ends, sets off the pirate-inspired green felt hat. Soldiers, sailors and campus beaus will be captivated with the picture made by gaminesque curls to balance the tassels of the wool crochet scotch cap as worn by the bonnie lassies at far right. Shampooing with a liquid soapless shampoo with hair conditioner added is one way to soft hair with mirror-like sheen.

Sour Cream

Save every speck of sour cream as it can be put to good use in cake, cooky and sauce recipes. Store in covered jar in refrigerator.

Salad Spheres

One-inch cream or cottage cheese balls, rolled in grated orange rind and mixed with shaved or coarsely chopped Brazil nuts, pecans or English walnuts, are nice for salads.

Ham and Honey

For something savorful use equal parts of strained honey and dark brown sugar for topping baked or boiled ham. Bake 30 minutes in a moderate oven to get the desired glaze. Do the same thing to pork chops or roast for a special taste.

Watch the Oven

Baked foods with honey and molasses in them should be cooked in a moderate oven and watched carefully as they will scorch readily.

New Bicycle Costume Most Becoming of All

Something really new has been added to the ranks of bicycle togs. It's neither a culotte, nor slacks, nor even the more recent knee-pants.

It's called a "pedal pusher," and it's worn by Rosemary La Planche, who has left her role as Miss America to play a leading one in Hal Roach's "Prairie Chickens." It's a cross between the culotte and the slack, actually, since it's the length of the former and cut much like the latter. It's better suited to bicycling than long slacks, and it's more becoming than knee-pants or even culottes, which are often bulky.

Rosemary's new fall pedal pusher is in menswear gray flannel, and she wears it with a matching cardigan and a pink angora sweater for cool days, a bright green crepe shirt for warm ones.

Spoon Bread With New Flavor

Buttermilk can add new zest to food. One dish that is especially good when made with buttermilk is spoon bread. This breadstuff is one that fits into many meals. Make it by the following recipe:

Buttermilk Spoon Bread—Add 1½ cups boiling water and 2 tablespoons butter to 1 cup cornmeal and stir until the butter is melted. Cool slightly. Beat 2 eggs well, stir in 1½ teaspoons salt and ½ teaspoon soda and add 1½ cups buttermilk. Add to the first mixture gradually. Pour into a buttered baking dish and bake in a moderate oven, 350 degrees, for about 40 minutes, or until as firm as desired. Serve hot with butter. Six servings.

Home Town Vacation

Ax in hand, figuratively speaking, Mrs. Henrietta DeGoofey, noted reformer, has descended upon a new and ticklish problem—the home-town vacation.

Mrs. DeGoofey

"There is no use being mealymouthed about the question any longer," the president of the Do Something About It League, who had just returned from her home town of Utopia, Nebr., told her press conference yesterday. "The truth is that nine out of ten persons, much as they may desire to see their immediate relatives, dread going home on vacation. And why? Because the home town vacation has become a strain equaled only by an old-time county fair or a Democratic political convention."

"But Mrs. DeGoofey," protested the editor of a Poets Corner," you are not suggesting that there is any place like home sweet home!"

Is Appraised By Villagers

"Yes, I think a good restful hospital bed or a padded cell in a sanitarium is to be preferred by the vacationist who is being put through her paces for the benefit of the gaping villagers," was the reply.

"Why, the average home town vacationist, on her return to work, has to spend the next six months recuperating from her vacation—from the strain of identifying all the new in-laws and babies, and all the former village adolescents who have suddenly become men and women of affairs; of getting around to see every remote connection of her family, so no one will be slighted; of attending family reunions at which she must be as adroit a politician as Jim Farley; of looking her best 24 hours of the day so that no keyhole peeper will be able to report triumphantly she is "slipping;" of explaining to everybody she meets whether or not she is married yet, and if not why not; whether or not she has a beau, and if not why not; of hearing the computation of her age made the subject of the day in all family and community gatherings; of having her gains or losses in weight appraised as though she were a steer on an auction block, of being cross-questioned as to how much she makes in her job, how much she pays for rent and how she is able to stand the traffic in Washington.

Must Impress With New Togs

"What is worse, she can't go back to the old home town in the tag-ends of her summer wardrobe. Oh no! To New York, perhaps—but not back home, where she must do her family proud and confound her enemies. So she must rush out and buy new clothes and take exercises to get her figure in shape and buy gifts for everyone (usually jumping off at train stops to pick up something for somebody she has not remembered.)

"And then she goes home and is wined and dined, and exhibited and paraded, and winds up by having no time alone with her own family except after midnight the day before she is to depart. And what happens when she gets back? She finds she has gained at least 10 more pounds from all the fried chicken, buttered pecan pie and chocolate brownies she has consumed at family dinners and at the luncheons and teas at which she has been feted.

Invites Town To Washington

"She also finds that in an expansive mood she has invited—nay, strongly urged, at least 100 persons to visit her in Washington and that, despite gasoline shortage, at least 99 of them likely to come within the next six months. As a result of her strenuous hometown vacationing she has to use up all her sick leave to recover her faculties."

"But surely you are not advocating that people should not go home on vacation?" exclaimed an etiquette editor.

"No. I would not be that revolutionary. But I intend to see that the home vacation returns to its original intent—a visit to see the home folks—rather than being a movie star bond selling tour. To that end the Do Something About It League is establishing a department of theatrical costuming to aid home town vacationists—and incidentally members of Congress and their wives—to return home incognito.

"We will have a supply of blonde, brunette and red wigs, heavy black veils, race track suits and even large mustaches and beards. By wearing these, the vacationists will be able to slip in home quietly, see their families, rest, eat and return in good health. Thus it will be a rest for everyone, perhaps even the home town folk who might not want to entertain the vacationist. And think what it will mean to members of Congress who fear they have not voted to please everybody!"

Mary Haworth's Mail

Sophisticated Girl, 25, Meets, Admires, Pursues And Finds Herself in Love With Fine Married Man; Is Platonic Friendship Possible for Them?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: When I came to Washington two years ago, I was invited to a social gathering at which I met a very charming and quite prominent professional man. At that meeting, we chatted only briefly, but I liked him instantly. I can assure you, however, that it was not a case of "love at first sight." Such a thought never occurred to me. I knew he was at least 15 years older than I am (my age is 25); and, also, a married man.

About a month later, I was in need of professional advice in his field. Knowing his reputation, and having met him, it seemed only natural to me at the time to make an appointment to see him. He proved himself as competent as I had anticipated; and he was also very kind. My interview with him lasted much longer than I had expected. We had a most delightful conversation. He inquired about my family, my position, my reactions to Washington, etc. And when he found that I was somewhat undecided about what I actually wanted most in life, he expressed some of the most beautiful Christian philosophy I have ever heard.

I am not sure now whether I asked if I might stop by and talk with him again; or whether he suggested that I do so. In any event, I did call on him again several weeks later. And again we had a most challenging and interesting discussion. It centered mostly on philosophy, a subject in which we are both very much interested. From that time on, I called on him at his office about once a month, with no inkling of what was going to happen; or of what was happening. On my fifth visit, he demonstrated an affection for me that was not platonic. I was amazed; but I guess I was also pleased. I have been wondering, since then, if that was what I had been angling for. I just can't be sure.

Once He Kissed Her, The Picture Changed

After that visit, I felt that I couldn't make any more appointments with him. And I think my decision was more a matter of pride than of morals. But since my office is near his, he has taken me home several times. Also, he has driven me home from a few social affairs. In these few trips, we have found the physical attraction that supplements the spiritual attraction we had recognized earlier. I love him with an emotion stronger than any I have ever known before. I feel as though I can't live without him; and I know that I must. His religion, to which he is very strongly attached, prohibits divorce. Also, he is devoted to his children.

As I have said, Miss Haworth, I am 25 years of age; and I have "been around." I have gone out with many young men; but I have never met one who kindled the same spark of feeling. I come from a city larger than Washington; and I have always considered myself fairly sophisticated. My problem, though not my suffering, has been simplified recently by the fact that the man has been out of town on business for more than a month. During his absence, I have faced the facts of the case as I see them. I know marriage is out of the question. I don't propose to ruin his life or mine by carrying on an "affair"—in the ugly sense of the word.

The one question I can't answer is this: I like him, aside from being in love with him. I want to be his friend, if I cannot be his wife. Is it advisable for me to explain my position to him and ask him to carry on the friendship strictly on the basis outlined? Do you think such an arrangement could work? I shall greatly appreciate your opinions.

M. L.

Confuses Friendship With Polite Intrigue

DEAR M. L.: True friendship—which is deep calling to deep in separate spirits—has no need to be "carried on." Such friendship just is—like sunshine or fresh air, which do not have to be clutched at and personally packaged, to be enjoyed. You say you wish to be this man's friend, if you cannot be his wife. So stated, the aspiration is blameless. None could deny you the right to be, in spirit, his friend. But when you speak of "outlining a basis for carrying on the friendship," it becomes clear that what you have in mind is a polite—a technically discreet—intrigue.

You are proposing to negotiate with him a theoretically noncompromising "thee-and-me" companionship arrangement, presumably for the purpose of conducting an intellectual exchange. But in so saying, you are playing the hypocrite with yourself—though perhaps unconsciously. What you actually want is as much of the man's time and attention as you can wangle, without losing moral prestige in his eyes, or your own. You would use the label, "friendship," to put a pseudo-candid face on an intrinsically furtive concession to bootless infatuation.

Far from being a friend to this man, you are potentially an enemy of his happiness and peace of mind. You are doing your utmost to undermine his integrity and sense of honor. You come close to facing the truth about yourself when you lefthandedly admit that in taking full advantage of his altruistic courtesy, by calling at his office repeatedly, you were hopefully bidding for his amorous interest—a fact which obviously was not lost on him. Considering the erotically vulnerable nature of the male, his eventual "nonplatonic demonstration" was inevitable, in view of your performance; and, from his angle, I daresay, reduced your mutual attraction to the lowest common denominator of interest.

Her Objective Isn't Actually Platonic

When he made you acquainted with his devotion to his children, and his conscientious objections to divorce, he told you, in effect, "You are wasting your affections on me, dear girl." The implication of his attitude is clear: If you continue, in the face of that oblique reminder, to angle for "nonplatonic demonstrations," you do so at your own risk. He pledges no fealty to you; guarantees no emotional satisfaction; no redress of heartache, heartbreak or damaged reputation. To speak, as you do, of explaining your "position" (i. e., your rationalization of your subversive purpose) and "asking him to carry on the friendship," strictly on an unsexed basis, is indirectly to avow a persisting, unprincipled determination to elbow yourself to the forefront of his life somehow.

You ask if your falseface proposition would work. It certainly wouldn't work any good for you—in view of your essentially possessive yen for the man. To undertake it (supposing he were to agree to it) would be to put yourself in the position of a fly trying to skate lightly over a spider's web. The only cure for what ails you—the only way to break the spell of this futile "fixation"—consists in cleancut renunciation of your wishful-thinking about the man; of your pipe dream that he was "made for you." And this means, necessarily, so planning your life as to keep him out of sight, until gradually he dissolves from mind. Remember the old saying: "Out of sight, out of mind" (after a time). And the other old saying, brought up to date: "Absence makes the heart grow fonder—of somebody else.

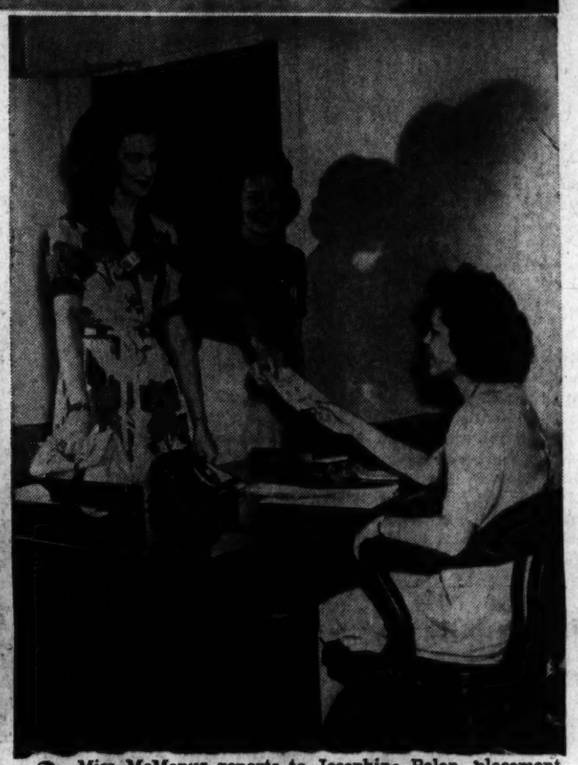
First Day in Washington

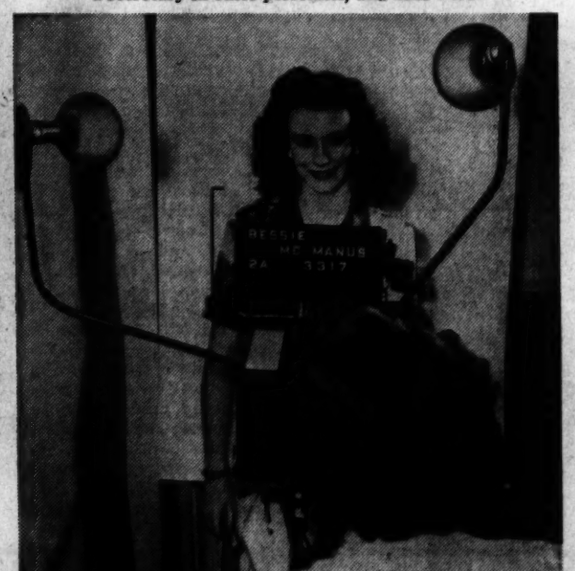
Like thousands of her sisters from all parts of the country, Miss Bessie McManus of Sheridan, Wyo., after passing a civil service examination at home, has come to the Nation's Capital to join the vast army of Government employes needed here to further the war effort. Miss McManus, just arrived at the Nation's Capital, emerges from Union Station to hail a taxicab (above). She doesn't know that it's practically impossible to take a "solo" ride in a Washington cab these days.

1. This picture shows Mary Luongo, assistant appointment officer (standing) offering advice to Miss McManus and two other young women as they start filling out their three required application forms.



2. Miss McManus reports to Josephine Polan, placement officer of the War Manpower Commission, who interviews her about her position. Shown here are, left to right, Miss McManus (wearing her visitor's badge), Lucille Lantz, a secretary in office personnel, and Miss Polan

3. Miss McManus, after being fingerprinted (still wearing visitor's badge) is here taking the oath of office, along with other new arrivals, the oath being administered by Miss Eugenia Sullivan, induction clerk.



4. Miss McManus, who came to the Nation's Capital from Wyoming to work for the Government, is shown being photographed for her permanent identification badge

YOUR FIGURE, MADAME!

With the New Styles, It's Smart to Be Trim

By Ida Jean Kain

This fashion season you'll begin to cut your figure to fit your cloth. Our war styles are exciting. The designers have outdone themselves in giving us everything from a new kind of pleat to a substitute for slide fasteners. But they are also bent on saving some millions of yards of material.

Your wartime frock will be shorn of the frills, furbelows and loosely hung jackets that camouflaged the bulges. The first time you try one on, you may wonder whether you're not in the wrong size. If your figure is badly out of line, the salesgirl will have too much tact to say anything that might lower your morale. But she may have to bring on a larger dress.

That's not what you want. You want to be in step with the styles and in shape to take it, and they go together. So if the new nipped-in waistline shows plainly that yours does not nip in, here is an exercise that will make you feel fit and slim.

Position: Stand on the knees, knees slightly apart, arms stretched out at the sides shoulder level.

Movement: Without lowering the arms from the shoulders, try to bend sideward at the waist until you touch fingers to the floor. Then straighten up and bend to the other side. Do that six times a day for the first week, later work up to 12 counts, and eventually to 24. As you bend sideward, pull up with the lower abdominal muscles and center all the stretch through the midsection.

The new swathed hipline will be snug. But whether or not it will be a smooth fit depends on your hips. Here is an exercise that will give you smooth, compact lines:

Position: Sit on the floor with knees flexed and feet held off floor. Lean slightly backwards.

Movement: Roll across the hips until the thigh rests on the floor. Roll back across and over on other thigh. Keep rolling for 12 counts for a starter and gradually increase to 25.

Finish your midsection slimming with this one:

Position: Lie on back on floor with left knee bent and foot on floor, right leg straight down on floor.

Movement: Swing the right leg straight up in air from hip. Hold and lower. As you bring the leg up and lower it, keep pressing small of back down to floor. Repeat for six counts, then change to left leg, bending right knee and holding that foot on floor.

It's About Time

The Floor Show in Wartimes

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin

Because there are still pretty good stocks of rugs in many of the stores, not many people realize how seriously the production of rugs has been cut by war restrictions. But since the time is soon coming when there won't be any more of the rugs we know best, we'd all better take a look at what will be available instead. Some of the ideas being developed for replacement bid fair to win a permanent place on their own merits.

There will be more and more mixtures of different yarns for rugs in place of wool rugs. At the present time it appears that most of these mixtures will be of rayons and cottons, but some rug experts predict that fibers we haven't yet heard of will be developed. And we can be sure that cottons and synthetic fibres will acquire new qualities under present experimentation . . . we may find them treated so as to be far more impervious to soil, dampness and stain than most familiar rug fibres. There's no doubt that novelty textures will be more important even than in the past because mixtures of fibres and spreading of wool won't be possible in straight pile weaves. Shaggy weaves and a new pattern technique made with islands of design in uncut loops against the plain backing of the rug . . . these promise now to be the things.

Make Your Own Combination

Unit rugs also suggest many new possibilities. This trend started with the decorators taking smaller squares of strips of rugs and attaching them together to make a larger rug. This was especially successful with combinations of some of the new lovely colors in cotton rugs. The manufacturers of all types of rugs see a lot in this idea . . . for they can turn their smaller looms to the creation of unit rugs. These can be attached by an adhesive backing or by contrasting color saddle stitching.

Colors in the new rug fibres will undergo some changes. There will not be many more fine dark rich colors that wool dyes took so well. In place of these there will be soft dull pastels that do best in cottons, and lots of grayed tones and sand colors and rosy beiges along with dull blues and olive greens and some soft grape tones.

So far there aren't many new designs, for most lines are drastically short. So the colonial and eighteenth century designs will be the stand-bys. The only new notes are some Indian and South American motifs that fit in with the informal type of furniture that suits many new small homes. One designer predicts more pattern ahead, however, to distract the eye from the basic changes in material and construction.

Some good things may come out of the crisis the rug industry is now in. The experimentation now going on will undoubtedly contribute many permanent new improvements in methods and materials. The search for a substitute for jute, used for rug backing, is almost as pressing as the need for fibres to replace wools. The hooked rugs that used to be made in Japan are now being made in North Carolina. Altogether it is expected that the American rug industry may find itself in a stronger position after the war because of the pressure the emergency has put upon it.

Hollywood Looking Glass

Now along comes Ginger Rogers wearing a dress with a fur belt. It's all a little whimsey whipped up by Leslie for Ginger to wear in her new RKO-Radio picture, "Once Upon A Honeymoon." Dress is black crepe, its only detail the rows of fine tucks set vertically round the frock just below the waist, with similar tucks radiating from edge of round neck yoke. Belt is shrimp pink, with long insertions on either side of the buckle, the inserts black Persian lamb. With the frock, Ginger wears one of the new short box coats of shrimp pink wool, the narrow turned-back cuffs and front facings also Persian lamb. If you handle such cuffs and facings correctly, Leslie reminds you, the effect is that of a jacket completely lined with fur. At much less cost.

In this same furry mood—but no fur—is the new cocktail hat Anne Shirley wore with a black dress when she went dancing recently at the Mocambo. Hat is a tall cone of black felt trimmed with a cascade of puffballs made—of all things—of white marabou. Imagine marabou. Out of the boudoir to make high hats for high society.

Such wonderful coats coming out for fall. Favored are woolly little numbers, comfortable, practical, with the rakish lines usually found only in fashion books. We love the one Dorothy Lamour wore recently while having tea at the Beverly Brown Derby. Coat is street length, a wool fleece in ice blue. Tailored collar fastens back on either side with tailored straps of the fabric. To continue the effect there are straps to fasten the sleeves right to the wrist, a half belt to snug it close to the waistline in back. Just for the originality of it, Dorothy wears this blue coat with olive green accessories.

Elaine Darlington Is Married To James D. Pitney

In the garden of the George Garretts' home on Thirtieth Street, Miss Elaine Darlington was married at 6 o'clock last evening to James Duncan Pitney. The bride, who is the daughter of Mrs. Garrett and the late Harry Darlington, jr., of Philadelphia, made her debut here last year at a brilliant ball at the Sulgrave Club. Mr. Pitney is the son of Mrs. Huston Rawls of Fat Hills, N. J., and the late John Pitney. He is the grandnephew of Mrs. Mahlon Pitney of this city, wife of the late Supreme Court justice.

Msgr. Edward L. Buckey officiated at the ceremony before an improvised altar banked with pink dahlias and with lighted candles on either side. Pink gladioli and dahlias in alabaster vases decorated the garden. Sidney's string orchestra played softly throughout the ceremony.

Given in marriage by her stepfather, Mr. Garrett, the bride wore a severely simple gown of white satin, cut on classic lines and ending in a train. Her full-length veil was of lace. She carried a prayer book with a shower of orchids.

Mrs. Price Is Matron of Honor

The attendants were Mrs. Charles Price, matron of honor, Miss Barbara Iselin, maid of honor, Miss Margaret Morgan of Baltimore, Mrs. Randall Hagner, Mrs. McCullough Darlington, and Miss Betty van der Straten-Ponthoz. They were all dressed alike in flesh-colored frocks of moire with brown velvet hats. They carried large bouquets of deepening shades of gladioli, chrysanthemums and other fall flowers.

Couple to Live In New Jersey

Huston Rawls served as best man and ushers were Phillip Cole of New York, Thomas J. Hillard of Pittsburgh, Ensign Harry Darlington 3d, Robert Pitney of New Jersey, and the Commercial Counselor of the Argentine Embassy, Miguel E. Quirno-Lavalle.

A reception followed in the garden. Receiving with the young couple, Mrs. Garrett wore a brown frock and a cyclamen velvet hat. Mrs. Rawls had chosen a gray outfit and blue hat.

When the couple left for their wedding trip, the bride wore a black frock with a wide pale blue belt and pale blue hat. They will live at 25 Palmer Square West in Princeton, N. J. Mrs. Pitney attended Farmington School and was educated abroad both in France and Italy. Mr. Pitney attended Princeton University.

Guests from out of town included the bride's grandmother, Mrs. Peter Shields of Philadelphia, Mr. and Mrs. William Penn Snyder, jr., Mr. and Mrs. George R. Hamm, Mr. and Mrs. Henry C. Bingham, jr., all of Pittsburgh, Pa.; Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Scott of Wilmington, Del., Mr. and Mrs. Crawford Burton of New York, Mr. and Mrs. Edward L. Travers of Rhinebeck, N. Y., Miss Eleanor Travers also of Rhinebeck, Mrs. Lyreth Hull of Strattsburg, N. Y., Miss Mary Cecil, Miss Mary Cordelia Thompson and Mr. and Mrs. Edward P. Farley, all of New York.

MRS. JAMES DUNCAN PITNEY

Bayly-Winters Wedding at St. Joseph's

St. Joseph's Church was the scene of the wedding of Miss Salome Carole Winters and Dr. John Henry Bayly yesterday morning at 9 o'clock. The bride is the daughter of Mrs. John J. Winters and the late Mr. Winters of this city. Dr. Bayly is the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. J. Archer Bayly of Troy, N. Y. Msgr. Edward A. McAdams officated at the ceremony before an altar decked with palms and lilies of the valley.

Given in marriage by her brother, the bride wore an ivory satin gown that ended in a train. Her fingertip veil fell from a cap of satin and she carried a prayer book with a shower of orchids.

Mrs. William Thompson served as matron of honor for her sister, wearing a moss green satin gown and matching hat. She carried pink tiger lilies. Leut. Joseph Jana, United States Army Medical Corps, served as best man and ushers were Dr. John Fenton, Dr. John Murphy and Thomas Winters.

A breakfast followed at the Willard Hotel. The couple will spend their honeymoon in New England and upon their return will live in Washington. The bride attended Mount Mercy College for Women, the University of Pittsburgh and did graduate work at Catholic University. Dr. Bayly attended Renssalaer Polytech School in Troy and was graduated from Georgetown Medical School.

Sarah Darlington Will Marry Ensign Sands, Jr.

Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. William Marshall Darlington, United States Navy Reserve, of Pomona Hills, Westchester, Pa., announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Sarah March Darlington, to Ensign William Franklin Sands, jr., U. S. N. R., son of Mr. and Mrs. William F. Sands of this city.

The bride-elect is the granddaughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Logan M. Bullitt of Philadelphia. She was graduated from Eden Hall in Torresdale, Pa. Ensign Sands, who was graduated from the University of Pennsylvania and is now in naval aviation, is the grandson of the late Rear Admiral and Mrs. James Hoban Sands. He is also grandson of Mrs. John M. Keating of Sunnyside, Wawa, Pa., and the late Dr. Keating. His aunt is Mrs. Charles N. Harris of this city.

The marriage will take place in St. Agnus Church in Westchester, Pa., on Saturday September 26.

Irvines Here From West Coast

Among recent arrivals in the Capital are Lieut. D. G. Irvine, U. S. N., and Mrs. Irvine, who have come here from the West Coast, where Lieutenant Irvine was stationed.

They are stopping at the Brighton Hotel while here.

Lieut. Paul Mellon Attends Christening Of Son, Timothy

Well, he got back in time for the christening anyway. Lieut. Paul Mellon, U. S. Army, who has been stationed at Fort Riley, Kansas, arrived home to join Mrs. Mellon and their two children at the new Rokeby estate in Virginia, which they have just completed.

And he was just in time for the christening of their six-weeks-old son Timothy, who was given his name at a ceremony at the Trinity Episcopal Church of Upperville, with the Rev. Charles Ryley officiating. After the ceremony about 30 friends of the Mellons were asked in to celebrate the event.

Capt. and Mrs. Stevenson Now Capital Residents

Capt. and Mrs. Edward Ford Stevenson, who recently came to Washington from Wright Field, have taken an apartment at the Hotel Fairfax. Mrs. Stevenson, who is widely known as Suzanne Silvercruys, is widely known in Washington, having visited here many times when her brother, Baron Silvercruys, now Belgian Minister to Canada, was Counselor at the Belgian Embassy here.

Distinguished as a sculptor, lecturer and author, she has executed the portrait busts of many distinguished persons and produced a number of memorials and trophies. Her exhibition of Catholic religious sculpture was sponsored last year by Fordham University in New York. Her latest book, "A Primer of Sculpture," published in April, is now in its second edition. Last spring Temple University here conferred upon her the honorary degree of doctor of humane letters.

Since it is impossible now to obtain bronze and other metals, Miss Silvercruys has been working recently in wood and plastic. She had an exhibition of portrait heads in mahogany at the Dayton Art Institute before leaving Ohio.

'Slack Figures'

Men Have No Corner On the Business of Building Bombers

Men have no corner on this bomber business.

The feminine touch is making itself felt—and how—in the work of building planes for the fighting forces. If any skeptic still wonders how important that touch is, a glance at the Glenn L. Martin Co.'s figures—on paper and in slacks—should reassure him.

Back in October of last year, the first group of a dozen feminine employes were ushered into the finishing department and allowed to tackle a few of the easiest jobs. Now, less than a year later, Martin employs many women, and it's hard to find a corner of the plant where women are not doing quite a large slice of the work. In some sections they have taken over man-sized jobs, and have replaced men entirely.

Dozens Have Grown To Thousands

The original dozen has grown miraculously to an army of more than 7500 women in the whole company, with over 5000 of those busy on the actual production and assembly of planes. And still they come. At the rate of over 500 a week, recruits of all ages are walking up to machines and drafting boards, typewriters and test tubes, meeting the demands of a tremendous production schedule by which bombers are delivered to the fighting forces.

Management's wishful thinking and girls' patriotism can't work this miracle alone. Nine local Defense Vocational Schools provide the sound training needed, and a large portion of the women employed have graduated from their four-week classes.

These trained women in a light, clean aircraft plant today are by no means in the position of factory workers years ago. The plane producing business has taken on the status of a feminine career. Whether she rivets wing sections, designs tools, assembles electrical parts or compiles figures, the woman war worker knows how dependent the Nation is upon the role she plays.

She may or may not know, in addition, that nearly all production and engineering processes have been broken down into simpler steps so that her inexperience will be no hindrance. Several women these days do the various parts of what used to be one complicated operation. Thus women make possible a more effective use of experienced men workers as supervisors and instructors, and at the same time fill gaps in the vital production front left by men headed for the battlefields.

Glamour Girls Fill the Gaps

The gaps they fill are as varied as the backgrounds of the women themselves, and their range of skill as wide as their difference in ages. Housewives who never thought of working before, college graduates, gray haired matrons and young glamour girls, experienced factory workers and women who were bored from playing bridge all day while the Nation bustled, all these have found that their efforts are welcomed in the job at hand.

Hope Ridings Miller

In a hectic wartime Capital where newcomers, visitors and even a few bewildered oldtimers decry crowded conditions, the general confusion and the rudeness of harassed taxi drivers, hotel managers and overworked sales clerks, Senora de Collazo Pittaluga is a refreshing personality.

Senora de Collazo Pittaluga

"I've never lived in a city where people are more accommodating, kinder or more interesting," she said the other day. "Everybody I've met here has been . . . well, simply wonderful!"

That's high praise from a woman who was born in Brazil, educated in peacetime Paris and has lived in Madrid and in Uruguay, the South American country which John Gunther says "believes deeply in democratic institutions and honors them in practice as well."

Comdr. Collazo Pittaluga, Naval Attache of the Uruguyan Embassy, smiled his approval of what his attractive wife was saying. Yes, he, too, liked Washington. No, the hustle and bustle of a wartime city did not annoy him. He was used to that. He had been in Madrid during the Spanish civil war and in Rio de Janeiro at the time of the Integralistas uprising.

"Wherever I am," he said with a smile, "there seems to be trouble."

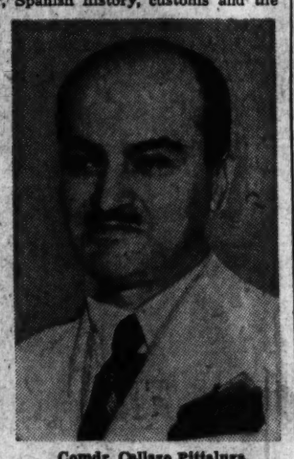
Incidentally, the commander has three diplomatic "firsts" to his credit. He served as his country's first naval attache in Spain and then in Brazil . . . before coming here as a first in the same capacity.

Talk turned again to how much he and his wife like the United States and she said she found it "more fascinating every day . . . When I really learn the language," she went on, "I think I'll like this country, and this city, even more."

Seemed to me she had already learned it. I said as much. "But, no," she insisted. "I still have an accent. I must do better than that. I want to speak like a native and to learn everything—simply everything—there is to know about the United States."

His wife, who was born in Brazil, has had an opportunity to "learn everything there is to know" about several countries. She has been a diplomatic hostess in three capitals; studied eight years in another; speaks five languages and has managed to find out more facts about each land in which she has lived than the average native ever knows.

While studying in Paris for eight years she became engrossed in the history of France, in mingling with French people, rather than following the line of least resistance and seeking out fellow Brazilians who lived there. In Madrid, later, Spanish history, customs and the language became her chief interests. In Uruguay, her country by marriage, she delved deeply into the background, current problems and progress of the land sometimes called "the prewar Denmark of Latin America." Now she's concentrating on the United States . . .



Comdr. Collazo Pittaluga

And she's wasting no time about it. Regular lessons in English . . . the association with as many North Americans as possible . . . the insistence that nobody converse with her in either Portuguese or Spanish, and her instructions to the teacher of her 7-year-old daughter, Maria Cecy, that the child be allowed to speak only English at school—these points all have a place in her well-laid plan. The other daughter of the household, 5-year-old Alice, also is learning English.

In Washington a comparatively short time, both Commander and Senora de Collazo Pittaluga have a wide acquaintanceship with North Americans . . . and that goes for not only members of the State Department and other officials but for the butcher, the baker, the boy who delivers their newspapers, clerks in stores—"well, just about anybody who will talk to us. We like them all. And we can learn something about the country from every one of them," she said.

Her avid curiosity about any land in which she happens to be may stem from earlier experiences as a journalist, or, rather, a magazine writer. In recent years, however, her duties at home and her self-imposed program of study have precluded all literary activity. "Perhaps, someday, I shall have time for that again," she said.

Horse Play—

Benefit Dance Planned Before Horse Show

An "all out" benefit dance will follow the forty-third Warrenton Horse Show next Saturday evening at the Warren Green Hotel—with the Fauquier County Chapter of the Red Cross Motor Corps profiting from the benefits.

Miss Dorothy Neyhart, who directs the motor corps has reserved the balcony of the hotel and many dinners are being planned beforehand. Mr. and Mrs. Martin Vogel, jr., will entertain at their home, Waverly, preceding the dance.

A number of other parties will be given in connection with the show which is being held from Saturday through Labor Day, the proceeds going to the U. S. O. in Fauquier County.

On Saturday afternoon, Mr. and Mrs. Robert C. Winmill will entertain at tea. Mrs. Winmill is a director of the Horse Show Association.

On Sunday, Mrs. James C. Hamilton, chairman of the executive committee and busy secretary of the Horse Show Association, with her sister, Mrs. Melville Bearns, also a member of the entertainment committeee, will entertain at a small joint luncheon at the home of Mrs. Bearns.

That afternoon Mrs. Douglas Prime will have her swimming party in the Eastwood pool, followed by a picnic supper.

On Monday, closing day of the show, Mr. and Mrs. Francis D. Thomas will entertain at luncheon at North Rock, their home on Bethel Road.

Following the close of the show Monday, after the coveted championships ribbons are pinned, J. North Fletcher, president of the Warrenton Horse Show, and Mrs. Fletcher will entertain at tea at Crestone.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick W. Haserick will entertain at Loretto as their house guest George Timmins of Groton, Mass., who will judge at Warrenton. Christopher Wadsworth, Kenmore, N. Y., another judge, will be the house guest of Mr. and Mrs. Winmill. Mrs. Thomas Mercer Waller, Bedford Hills, N. Y., judging ponies, will be with Mrs. David M. Waller. Mrs. Douglas Prime will be hostess to Lieut. and Mrs. Herbert Bryant of Alexandria and Mrs. Ellie Wood Page Keith, Charlottesville. Mr. and Mrs. Fletcher will have Rigan McKinney of Woodbine, Md., and Dixie Boykin of Camden, S. C., with them at Creston for the weekend. Mr. and Mrs. J. C Hamilton will have as their house guests Lieut. Col. and Mrs. "Tony" Lubberman of this city and Mrs. Mary Jackson, Keswick, Va.

Princess—

Tucksoon Minn of Korea Has Plan to Help Her Countrymen

By Peggy Preston

The 35,000 Korean soldiers who are fighting side by side with the armies of China are going to receive their share of help from their fellow countrywomen in America and Hawaii.

Her pretty, slanting eyes aglow with enthusiasm, the petite Korean princess, whose musical name is Tucksoon Minn, is telling friends in town these days of a plan to help the heroic Korean men. She is asking all Korean women in the United States and Hawaii, roughly 10,000 in all, to enlist in a Korean Women's War Auxiliary.

Taking a tip from the alphabetic vogue for names of organizations in the country of her exile, Princess Minn will call hers the KWWA., and work done by members will be sent abroad through the courtesy of the Red Cross.

"The Koreans have known what Japanese invasion and slavery means longer than has anyone," says the princess, whose country was overrun and annexed by the Japs in 1910. Because we have been in slavery so long we are sometimes forgotten, but my countrymen have not forgotten and every day a few more escape the bonds and find some way to serve their country on the outside."

However, as the princess points out, the Korean army is a financially poor body of men and are more badly fed, dressed and comforted than any army in the world. To rectify this, she and other Koreans in Washington have made arrangements with the

PRINCESS MINN

Red Cross to see that food, clothing and medical supplies reach them on the battlefields of China.

Headquarters of the KWWA will be at 1766 Hobart Street, where a workroom has been set up. Assisting Princess Minn in her efforts are Dr. Syngman Rhee, first President of the ill-fated Korean Republic in 1919 and at present chairman of the Korean Commission; Miss Anne Park and Mrs. Philip W. Han.

Although she has been in the United States only since 1939, the young princess speaks English with only the slightest accent. This year, for the first time since her arrival here, she will not go to college. Firstly, because she has recently married a childhood beau, and, secondly, because of her work with the KWWA, which she believes will be of real help to her conntrymen.

Her only family tie with her native land now is her father, from whom she has not heard in two years. Her mother died some years ago and others of her family have either been killed by the invaders or left the country for other lands.

The pretty princess with her tragic background is a niece of the last King of Korea, who was poisoned by the Japs in 1910. While her life in Korea was unpleasant, she, like most of her countrymen in exile, plans always on a return some day to an independent "Land of the Morning Calm."

"Our hopes were dashed after the last war, when, because of political reasons, my country was unable to obtain independence," she said as she outlined the activities of an underground organization for freedom which resulted in the secret election of a President and the formation of a provisional government with headquarters in Shanghai.

But with the opening of hostilities between Japan and the United States last December, Koreans all over the world again took hope and patriots are once more plotting and planning for a free Korea, according to Princess Minn.

Pulliams Here From Honeymoon

Now at home in Washington, after a wedding trip to Rehoboth Beach are James W. Pulliam and his bride, the former Miss Betty Marie Barnard, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert H. Barnard. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Rufus E. Pulliam.

They were united in marriage on August 22 at a nuptial mass performed by the Rev. Joseph V. Buckley in St. Francis Xavier's Church. Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a gown of ivory satin with long sleeves and circular train. Her full-length veil was held with a coronet of lace and she carried a prayer book and a bouquet of gardenias and stephanotis. Mrs. Adelaide O'Connell, the matron of honor, wore rose faille and carried lavender asters. Maid of honor was Miss Doris Vensel, attired in blue faille and her flowers were blue asters. Curtis Bouldin was best man and ushering were Joseph M. Barnard and Charles C. Staunton.

Following the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents. Mrs. Barnard is a graduate of St. Cecilia's Academy and the bridegroom attended Maryland University.

IT STILL MAY BE two or three weeks or more away, but the moving of "Mrs. Miniver" to the Columbia screen and the ensconcing of Mr. Gable and Miss Turner in "Somewhere I'll Find You" in the Palace this morning, bring "Holiday Inn" just that much closer than it was before. A comforting thought.

FRED ASTAIRE

For what it may be worth and the benefit of those who were out that day, it was reported here weeks ago, immediately following a premature preview, that Mark Sandrich's production of Irving Berlin's "Holiday Inn," costarring Bing Crosby and Fred Astaire, is the most diverting light musical entertainment that has been captured in celluloid in recent months—maybe years.

Not so much because we happened to preview the picture with Producer Sandrich and lunched with him afterward, as that we got a terrific bang and a mighty lift out of Mr. Crosby's dancing, Mr. Astaire's singing and all the other novel touches Berlin managed to pack into his yarn of a gay spot open only on holiday because its proprietor, Mr. Crosby, was the laziest lad extant in show business.

Each day the inn is open, the spirit of that particular holiday is reflected in the music, action and "atmosphere." Christmas and New Year's are honeys, but when the business gets around to the Fourth of July, Mr. Astaire will practically knock you dizzy with his firecracker dance. That's where you get that "bang" we were speaking of. There's a whimsical love story in there somewhere, too.

Anyhow, "Holiday Inn" will be coming along to the Palace as soon as Mr. Gable and Miss Turner vacate. Two of its tunes, "White Christmas" and "Be Careful, It's My Heart," have been marching in the hit parade for quite a spell now.

If you care to go on peeking over the horizon, when Walter Wanger's "Eagle Squadron" concludes its zooming around at RKO-Keith's, Abbott and Costello will relieve the pressure on the nervous system with a little something called "Pardon My Sarong," which has the good judgment to return Virginia Bruce to the local screen in an important role. And on September 10, at Loew's Capitol, no matter how good "Invisible Agent" is—and based on the H. G. Wells story of the little man who was always there, but couldn't be seen, it is apt to be pretty good—Gene Krupa and his orchestra, on the stage, is a sure-shot to steal the show. Coming down to something as close as tomorrow, you won't find a dull moment in "Across the Pacific," with Humphrey Bogart, Mary Astor and Sydney Greenstreet, stars of "The Maltese Falcon." You won't find Walter Houston in it, either, despite the fact that his boy, John, directed. Wally probably was busy making "Yankee Doodle Dandy," or something.

And Another One Will "Ride Again"

And who should be coming up for another screen resurrection—his third—but the Cisco Kid. After a protracted period of quiescence, the Kid will be coming back to life in an item bearing the slightly shopworn title of "The Cisco Kid Rides Again." This time around, he will be impersonated by Cesar Romero, vice Warner Baxter who scored one of his more resounding hits in the part, 'way back when. With all due respect to Mr. Romero, why not Baxter himself, since he is reputedly following the way of all cinema flesh by coming out of his self-imposed retirement?

Richard L. Coe, "Dick" to you, formerly of this and the radio page and now of the United States Army Air Forces at Scott Field, Ill., still has an eye out for the theater when not devoting it to the intricacies of radio as applied to military uses. The St. Louis Municipal Opera, at the moment, seems to be the center of his off-duty interest, especially as it concerns Sibyl Bowan and the hit she has scored there in "Roberta." The clipping he underlined heaviest in yesterday's batch said, "If applause at a dozen other spots in the show was warm or enthusiastic, for Miss Bowan it was positively riotous." That's the gal who was to have played Loew's Capitol last April, but somehow hasn't managed to get around to it yet!

When Eddie Dowling brings Gilbert K. Chesterton's "Magic" and Bill Saroyan's one-acter, "Hello, Out There," into the National for the week of September 14, with Julie Haydon in the principal feminine roles, the plays will be lighted by Abe Feder, acknowledged master of spectacular illumination. Most of New York's unique window displays have been lit up by Mr. Feder, one of whose recent commissions was lighting the windows of a string of doughnut shops stretching from coast to coast. The Dowling assignment will be Feder's last before entering the Army—where they go in principally for blackouts!

Sorry about Charlie Zurhorst. Since a grateful paragraph involving him appeared here a day or so ago, 11 acquisitive readers have petitioned him by phone to tag Irene Dunne around the East until he has secured an autographed photograph for each of them. All right, I said I was sorry!

Come-to-Think-of-it Note

Eleven readers? Couldn't be!

Some Hitchhikers Are Lucky!

ELYSE KNOX,

one of Hollywood's most promising starlets, now appearing in Walter Wanger's "Arabian Nights" for Universal, insists—via the publicity department, one presumes—that, after an automobile, a motorcycle cuts down wear and tear on tires and drain on the gas tank by at least a half. However, it is her pet cocker spaniel that seems really to be getting the break. Or hadn't you noticed him?

HEDDA HOPPER

Blowing the Horn for Hornblow!

Hollywood, Calif., Sept. 2. Arthur Hornblow has three stories ready for production—"Mary Smith, U. S. A.," about a girl who falls in love all over again with America; "Starlight," with Bill Powell and Hedy Lamarr, and "Quo Vadis."

WILLIAM POWELL

In "Starlight Bill" plays an astronomer, whose life is almost as upsetting as an actor's. He works by night and sleeps by day. Hedy becomes an astrologist, which is just about as acceptable to an astronomer as rat poison. You can imagine their complications.

His script on "Quo Vadis" should make an outstanding picture. Nero becomes Hitler in the modern version, and fundamentally there isn't much difference between the two. The part of a Roman soldier was written especially for Clark Gable—a sort of Roman Rhett Butler. Erroll Flynn could play it, but he'll no doubt be in the armed forces, too, when they get around to making it.

Natalie Visart, Cecil De Mille's fashion designer, has transferred her bits and pieces over to Hunt Stromberg's studio, which was a mighty smart move on his part. I know, because Natalie made me look the way I wish nature had in "Reap the Wild Wind."

Ann Sheridan lost a bet to Alexis Smith, but doesn't know it yet. Alexis bet Ann that she'd never be Mrs. Craig Stevens. She won't. When they marry, she'll be Mrs. Gail Shikles.

George Burns, just back from New York with Gracie Allen, says they're crazy about gin-rummy back there, too. They play three games at once.

Well, in a session he was having with Bill Murray, Ilka Chase's husband (who's a nice guy—he had just given George a 50-cent cigar!), George was 'way ahead when Bill dealt him a blitz hand. Not wanting to win, he picked up a king, which ruined his hand, and Louis Sobol watching over his shoulder, said, "Are you crazy?" George explained, "No, that's the way we play out West."

Sobol walked away in disgust, ran into Billy Seymour and said, "Of all the dopes—it's George Burns playing gin-rummy!" Billy couldn't wait to get into a game with him. He did. George took him for 75 bucks!

I've heard Rise Stevens sing at the Metropolitan, at the San Francisco Opera House, and at Our Shrine auditorium, but I'll take Rise in the Hollywood bowl. She was wonderful.

Eddie Bracken had such an urge to meet Carmen Miranda, so his wish was fulfilled at the Players the other night—and all he could say was "excuse me!"

Boy, are those long letters Bonita Granville gets from Jackie Cooper. She showed me one of 47 pages. Ain't love wonderful!

Rosemary De Camp, who has spoken with a foreign accent in practically every picture she's made, from "Hold Back the Dawn" to "Jungle Book," can't speak anything but English.

It was Edgar Selwyn in the last war, and not Arthur Murray, who said he regretted that he had but one wife to give to his country.

I couldn't be happier. In a letter from Oscar Morgan of Paramount's short department, he tells me that two of my shorts have been put on 16 mm. film and sent to our armed forces.

Those two show Janie Withers' birthday party, a Bob Hope broadcast with Elsie Janis, Frances Langford, Jerry Colona and the gang, Lum 'N Abner on Lum's ranch, with their children and horses, and Lum done up in cowboy clothes—both the boys looking as they do in person, not as the old men they impersonate on the radio and screen—and the prettiest shots I've ever seen of Connie Bennett at home with her three children.

Well-Balanced

rapidly rising on the Columbia lot, has reason to be gay since she is furthering her career as Rita Hayworth's sister in the Astaire-Hayworth dancical, "You Were Never Lovelier." Maybe she never has been

New York Calling—

New York, Sept. 2.

GOVERNOR LEHMAN: Last report from Washington was that you will resign from the Governorship to head the new stabilization program which the President will discuss in his Labor Day speech . . . CHIEF JUSTICE STONE: Lieut. Col. Frank Murphy will return to the Supreme Court bench in the fall. He tried to resign from the court and continue in the Army, but the President wouldn't accept his resignation . . . J. EDGAR HOOVER: New York businessmen, whose names were given as references by applicants for commissions in the WAVES, received inquiries about these applicants from Dun & Bradstreet, retained by the Navy as an investigatory agency.

IRENE DUNNE

LUCIUS BOOMER: The next member of royalty to visit this country will be King Haakon of Norway . . . CRITICS CIRCLE: The play which holds the long-run record for the American theater—Jack Kirkland's "Tobacco Road"—probably will reopen on Broadway this month. John Barton is expected to play the leading role in this return engagement . . . JIM FARLEY: Unless the President changes his mind, he will do nothing about indorsing any Gubernatorial candidate in New York. On registration day, however, in response to the usual question, the President will reply that he is registering for the purpose of voting as a Democrat.

SCREEN WRITERS GUILD: Gene Fowler, Ben Hecht and Jo Swerling have joined Lieut. Col. Frank Capra's film unit for the Army as consultant writers . . . CORDELL HULL: No matter the attitude of the State Department, Fiorello LaGuardia won't receive at City Hall any representative of a nation which is not definitely aligned against the Axis . . . EQUITY: Bufano, the famed puppeteer, is building the dinosaurus, "Frederick," which will be one of the characters in Thornton Wilder's new play, "The Skin of Your Teeth." Bufano became so engrossed in his creation that, at his request, he's been signed to wear the dinosaurus rig and play the role in that play.

SENATOR TRUMAN: Friday night there was a full meeting of the War Production Board in Washington. They gave a unanimous vote of confidence to Donald M. Nelson . . . VINCENT PRICE: When Metro films "Gaslight," its version of the current hit, "Angel Street," the stars will be Irene Dunne, Charles Laughton and Melvyn Douglas . . . PROF. ALBERT EINSTEIN: A famous professor of astronomy and meteorology just received his Army commission in the Air Force, after attending classes at Miami Beach. The professor keeps pointing to his shoulder-bar and asks: "Am I a lieutenant or a colonel? I keep forgetting."

ASCAP: Vincent Youmans, the noted songwriter who retired many years ago, is returning to Hollywood within the next 10 days, to resume his songwriting . . . THEATER GUILD: Now that her husband, Vincent Sheean, is in the Army, Diana Forbes-Robertson—niece of Maxine Elliot and daughter of the late English star, Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson—may try a stage career . . . SPEAKER RAYBURN: This is a novelty in politics: Lieut. Will Rogers, jr., who defeated Representative Leland Ford of California in the Democratic Congressional primaries, accomplished this feat without making a single appearance before the electorate. His many friends waged the campaign for him.

BORO PRES. CASHMORE: The Nation's first OPA Arbitration Court will be opened in Brooklyn shortly. Judge Louis Goldstein will be named to the non-salaried post of arbitrator . . . TYRONE POWER: Robert Taylor will enlist as soon as he completes his assignment in MacKinlay Kantor's "Gentle Annie" . . . A. A. A.: That pretty girl who takes that 45-minute walk to Annapolis and then back to her home on the bay, each day, isn't doing it only for the exercise. She's Mrs. Leon Henderson, whose husband is in charge of gas rationing. And she has to walk to town and back, for her purchases, because she's already used up all but two of her gas-rationing coupons.

'Ships With Wings' at the Pix

The British fleet air arm is the latest branch of service to be glorified in the cinema industry's current drive to acquaint the civilian with the activities of the various armed forces. An English-made film, "Ships With Wings," inaugurates the present Pix Theater policy of pictures of a more pretentious nature for a full week.

Despite a cast of luminaries from England's stage and screen, the honors of the film are easily won by the former pride of the British fleet, H. M. S. Rrk Royal, aboard which most of the footage was shot. Whatever action takes place away from the great aircraft carrier is bogged down by a slow and highly incredible script. This in no way is meant as doubt of the bravery of the English navy. It is only indicative of the haste and conditions under which the production was filmed.

Prior to the great air and naval engagement off Greece, which is the action highlight of the picture, the script deals with an officer of the fleet who is disgraced and court-martialed as the result of an accident which caused the death of a fellow shipmate. When war breaks out he is stranded on a small island near which German operations are taking place. He manages to elude his captors in time to warn the fleet, which is steaming into a trap laid by the enemy forces. His honor is redeemed when he gives his life in an air battle which breaks the back of the German offensive.

Aside from its other faults, the script has a strong tendency to discredit German military action which was later successful in its operations in that particular theater of war.

John Clements is seen as the heroic officer who performs the highest possible service to his country. Others in the cast are Leslie Banks, Basil Sydney, Jane Baxter and Ann Todd. Hugh Williams, seen often in this country, turns in a credible performance as a German aviator.

Double Revival Bill at the Little

An exceptional feast is on hand for every student of the mystery-thriller school. Not one, but two of the most exceptional melodramas made during the past few years are being revived this week at the Little Theater.

The first of these, "Night Train" has already played for nine consecutive weeks in Washington, and many of those who saw it then will want to see it again. Directed by Carol Reed, its suspense is based on the escape of a party of English citizens who are caught in Germany at the outbreak of the war. Most of the action takes place on a train bound for Switzerland, with the Gestapo close on the heels of the fugitives.

The second feature is a little-known Alfred Hitchcock melodrama. Based on a novel by Joseph Conrad, "The Woman Alone" tells the story of a band of terrorists whose acts of sabotage throw the great city of London into chaos. Sylvia Sydney, American actress of stage and screen, is seen as the wife of the leader of this band of thugs, who is unaware of her husbands dual personality. When her brother's death is caused by one of his acts, she turns to Scotland Yard and with her help the gang is destroyed. Oscar Homolka is effective as the dealer of destruction.

Nation's Women Lawyers Launch Drive to Help Sell War Bonds

By Genevieve Reynolds
The Post Club Editor

IF SOFT-SPOKEN Marguerite Rawalt, newly elected president of the National Association of Women Lawyers, gets her way, the feminine barristers of the Nation will be speech-making aplenty in the drive to sell more and more war bonds and stamps.

Miss Reynolds

"Even the shyest Portias will use their persuasive powers to sell bonds for victory," said Miss Rawalt. "Furthermore, they are further aiding by trying to unknot the taxation problems that are increasing in unprecedented proportions."

In discussing the part that women lawyers are performing in the war effort, she cited the fact that they are serving in new posts—in the War Department, in Selective Service, in the special War Policy unit and the Lands Division of the Department of Justice; in the Federal Communications Commission, where control of the telegraph, radio broadcasts and telephone communications have become an integral part in the conduct of the war. Many also are being called in to work at the Bureau of Internal Revenue in the tax division. In fact, many other Government departments are employing women lawyers for the first time.

A Special Stake

"Both as lawyers and as women, we have a special stake in this war," declared Miss Rawalt, who in private life is Mrs. Harry Secord, wife of Major Secord, United States Army Air Force, now stationed at Gulfport, Miss. The Axis powers have attacked the foundation of law and order and have returned the women of their countries to the subjugation of centuries past. In fortunate contrast, we women lawyers of the United States welcome a greater duty, a graver responsibility and a greater field of professional service than at any other previous period."

While pointing out the fact that the war had opened up larger fields of employment for women lawyers, Miss Rawalt stressed the fact that this placed larger and greater responsibilities on the women to assume a large share of leadership in the cities, communities and villages. In other words, they have the moral responsibilities of leadership that men barristers had before going into the armed forces.

Marguerite Rawalt, newly elected president of the National Association of Women Lawyers.

As for Miss Rawalt's war effort, she works as trial and review attorney, office of chief counsel, Bureau of Internal Revenue. She represents the Government in Federal income, estate and gift taxes tried before the United States Board of Tax Appeals. Also, she is on the Washington staff of the chief counsel, which reviews and coordinates cases tried in various decentralized regions of the country for the purpose of maintaining uniform bureau policies in the application and administration of Federal tax statutes.

Interested in Tax Law

Her primary professional interest is to be a really good tax lawyer. You'll find her particularly active in the taxation section of the American Bar Association and in international and comparative law section. As a delegate of the Federal Bar Association and the Women's Bar Association of the District, she appeared on the official program at the first conference of the Inter-American Bar Association in Havana, Cuba, March, 1941. Upon taking the oath as president of the National Association of Women Lawyers at the Detroit convention last month, she advocated and signed the constitution of the Inter-American Bar Association by which the N. A. W. L. became a member.

Before taking up law, Marguerite taught school. A native of Corpus Christi, Tex., she says she still likes wide-open spaces and athletics. Her favorite form of exercise is swimming, but she confesses to daily calisthenics to keep her waistline and hips trim. But if you want to see her eyes light up—just mention a fishing trip or a party. Next to giving parties—she keeps open house for her friends—she likes nothing better than fishing—or just people.

Elected to the Order of the Coif—law's Phi Beta Kappa—Marguerite received her law training at George Washington University school of law. She holds a master's degree as well as a bachelor's degree in law.

Essentially feminine in her manner, she is known for her delectable sense of humor as well as her profound knowledge of law and ability to cook a savory good meal.

Did You Know That . . ?

WHEN MRS. ERNEST HUMPHREY DANIEL, popular publicity chairman of the WOMAN'S NATIONAL DEMOCRATIC CLUB and director of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, returns to her home from a vacation in Chicago, she will find awaiting her an old friend—Mrs. Saidie Orr Dunbar of Oregon. Until Mrs. Daniel returns, her daughter, Mrs. Baldwin Cook, is playing hostess to Mrs. Dunbar.

Mrs. Daniel was president of the District Federation during Mrs. Dunbar's administration as National Federation president.

While in town, Mrs. Dunbar will attend the three-day conference which started yesterday of the Women's Division of the War Savings Staff. In Oregon she is State director of that organization.

Mrs. Saidie Orr Dunbar, former president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, now State Director for Oregon of women's division of the War Savings Staff.

Mrs. Ernest Humphrey Daniel—Publicity Chairman of the Woman's National Democratic Club and past president of the D. C. Federation of Women's Clubs.

Although Mrs. Dunbar has been ill since she returned to her post as executive secretary of the Oregon Tuberculosis Association at the expiration of her federation presidency last May, she mobilized Oregon's woman power and skills for the United States Employment Service—but that is still another story to come.

MISS AURELLE BURNSIDE of Hot Springs, Ark., stopped over in Washington this week en route home from the annual convention of the NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF WOMEN LAWYERS in Detroit. By the way, Miss Burnside has just been elected vice president of that association in her home State. A great enthusiast of the Equal Rights Admendment, she dropped by the NATIONAL WOMAN'S PARTY'S headquarters—the Alva Belmont House—to talk over the progress of the bill approved by the Judiciary Committees of the House and Senate.

"Men in Arkansas would welcome an equal legal status for men and women," averred Miss Burnside. "Now they—the men—are much inclined to encourage women to hold offices and to take an equal part in all civic matters."

Tau Beta Sigma Gives Program

TAU BETA SIGMA Sorority held last night a combined fashion show and card party at the Jewish Community Center for the purpose of raising funds for their National Ambulance Drive for the Red Cross.

Mrs. Bette Davis Markowitz, club chancellor, obtained fashion's shown from several local department stores.

Members of the sorority acting as models were Arnell Alper, Lil Berkowitz, Ethel Chlap, Beverly Cohen, Bea Greenberg, Jeanette Freedman, Sylvia Hein, Jeanette Jaschik, Rea Jaschik, Polly Jaschik, Mildred Kessler, Bette Markowitz, Ida Servator, Rhoda Greenberg, Terry Epter, Shirley Bowman, Ruth Hurwitz, Rosalie Sugar and Esther Wolin.

Guest models were Del Berkowitz, Annette Freedman, Mary Ellen Higgins, Helen Ghormley and Josephine Grasso.

Committee members were Betty Berry, Lenore Halpert, Florence Thorne, Jane Minsky, Louise Wright, Thelma Tepper and Mamie Lebed.

Catholic Institute Opened

CATHOLIC LEADERS in the field of women's organization work representing every section of the United States early this week opened a five-day institute on Catholic leadership training under the auspices of the National Council of Catholic Women. The sessions were held in the headquarters building of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, of which the National Council of Catholic Women is part of the department of lay organizations.

The Right Rev. Msgr. Michael J. Ready, general secretary of the N. C. W. C., keynoted the institute and pointed out that "We face great changes in our national life" and it becomes important for all leaders in social organizations to study social trends, to appraise the personnel in social movements, and to take an active part in community life."

Also on the opening session was the Rev. Edward J. Gracey, Catholic chaplain at Fort Meyer, Va., who called attention to the fact that the chaplains are taking care of the morale of the men in the service. "There are many problems arising from the men entering the service, the problems of girls left behind, who are lonesome, and that is a big field, to take care of the morale of these girls." Chaplain Gracey also pointed out that "as this war goes on married men will be drafted" and urged the "families and wives left behind be looked after." Likewise he called for continued interest on the part of the women in the Chaplains' Aid Association, making available necessary materials for spiritual work.

Miss Margaret T. Lynch, executive secretary of the National Council of Catholic Women, presented the speakers.

The Shop Scout

Good Mornin' folks. There's definitely a whiff of the new season approaching and your Shop Scout is a mighty busy gal these days getting things in order for you all. There's so much to do, and really not enough time to do it, so I'd better get a move on. Don't go way, tho. I've got some ideas up my sleeve on how to keep up with the times, so read on.

bushee's CHILDREN'S WEAR

"MORE THAN YOU KNOW" . . . your little Meg idolizes the blouses and skirts worn by the "older girls." Watch her eyes twinkle when she sees these at BUSHEE'S. Plaid, wool skirts, pleated and circular, bright, even-tone corduroys, soft herringbone tweeds. And for the very tiny tot (size 2 up) they've precious ones, accordion pleated plaids and swing skirts with suspenders, 2.50 up. Cunning white blouses with fancy frills or neat embroidered accents from 1.25. To peek-a-boo beneath the skirts are lace trimmed and embroidered edge panties and slips. Open Thurs. evening. 1311 Conn. Ave.

MORAINE House of Beauty

"JUST PERFECT FOR YOUR FEATHER CUT" . . . is the TURBANWAV permanent, as given at the MORAINE HOUSE OF BEAUTY, and it's so gentle on bleached or dyed hair. That's because this process is a heatless one, wrapped close to the scalp. Hair styling at MORAINE is an art, and for a really "different" oil shampoo they've a grand formula. WO. 1066 for a guest consultation. 3500 Conn. Ave.

Saks Fifth Avenue DISCONTINUED FOOTWEAR.

"WALK YOUR WAY TO VICTORY" . . . in the comfortable COMMANDO. Styled for smartness and durability as well, you'll love this soft, flexible suede, calf-trimmed, with the ever-so-popular wedgee heel. Available in black, navy, red and green. ROSS-SATURN features this shoe 'mongst its smart "collection of SAKS FIFTH AVENUE discontinued FOOTWEAR and other famous name brands. They're 5.95 to 8.95, sizes 3 to 10, widths AAAA to C. Half-block below Dupont Circle. Open 9 a. m. to 9 p. m. Monday thru Saturday. 1223 Conn. Ave.

"DINING OUT IN BUSY WASHINGTON" . . . can be a pleasure instead of the routine ordeal. Have you tried HOTEL 2400? If not, place it next on your list, for THE EMPIRE DINING ROOM here offers so much to the public. It's quiet, comfortably air-conditioned, the food delish, and prices moderate. Service is unexcelled, too. The dining room and lobby have recently been redecorated. I'm just sure you'll love it. For private parties, luncheons and dinners, HOTEL 2400 has excellent accommodations. CO. 7200 for reservations. 2400 16th St. N.W.

ANCHOR ROOM

"AHOY MATES" . . . For a heap o' fun on furlough, go to the ANCHOR ROOM, where you'll enjoy your favorite drinks in a gay, nautical atmosphere. There's a grand, new, entertaining duo who're tops—Peggy Norton, "hot" harpist, and Cassi Cassano master of the guitar. Together and separately their numbers are super. There's never a cover or minimum in the air-conditioned ANCHOR ROOM. HOTEL ANNAPOLIS, 12th and H Sts. N.W.

The Top Rounder Hamburgers With Personality

"PROUDLY ACCLAIMED" . . . and far more than "setting the pace" are the delicious hamburgers served at THE TOP ROUNDER. Obituary

Davis, Former Va. Governor, Is Dead at 83

By the Associated Press

Leesburg, Va., Sept. 2.—Westmoreland Davis, who returned to Virginia and became Governor of the State after having made his fortune by practice of law in New York City, died today in Johns Hopkins Hospital, in Baltimore. He was 83 years old.

Stricken ill Sunday morning, Davis was removed to Johns Hopkins for treatment. Dr. Ward Allan said his death was due to natural causes resulting from his advanced age.

Mrs. Davis was with her husband when he died, shortly after 8 a. m.

Episcopal services will be conducted tomorrow at 3 p. m. at Davis' Morven Park estate, in Loudoun County, with burial in the boxwood garden there.

The former Governor, robust and mentally alert, actively managed his extensive affairs until he was stricken ill. He was at his office of the Loudoun Times-Mirror, weekly newspaper which he published here Saturday. He also was publisher of the Southern Planter, an agricultural publication with a large circulation in Virginia and the South.

Elected to the governorship in 1917 as a farmer candidate over the bitter opposition of the State Democratic organization led by the late United States Senator Thomas S. Martin, Davis initiated a number of governmental reforms and laid the foundation through the budget system for Virginia's strong financial control.

His term as Governor stood out as one of businesslike administration. Among the achievements of his administration were prison reform and the establishment of a State lime-grinding plant at Staunton.

James J. Cahill Funeral Set For Tomorrow

Funeral services for James J. Cahill, native Washingtonian and an employe of Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. more than 30 years, will be held tomorrow at 10 a. m. from Chambers Georgetown funeral home, 3072 M Street Northwest. Burial will be in the National Memorial Park Cemetery, Falls Church, Va.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Addie E. Cahill; four children, Rose E., James Edward, and J. Theodore Cahill, Arlington; and Mrs. A. B. Heath, Falls Church, Va.; a sister, Mrs. Rose A. Clements, Washington; and a brother, Edward M. Cahill, New York City.

Last Rites Set Tomorrow for Nellie M. McGlincy

Mrs. Nellie Mae McClincy, 54, native of Washington, will be buried in Fort Lincoln Cemetery, following funeral services tomorrow, 2 p. m., at the Fourth Presbyterian Church, Thirteenth and Fairmont Streets Northwest.

Surviving, besides her husband, are her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John A. Miller, of Mount Rainier, Md.; three children, Mrs. Altheria Nolan, Cheverly, and George Hilton and Mrs. Margaret Holthause, both of Woodridge, D. C.; two sisters, Mrs. Ruth Bauman, Brentwood, Md., and Mrs. Pauline Fry, Washington; and a brother, John A. Miller, Brentwood.

H. W. Flournoy Funeral Services Set Tomorrow

Funeral services for Harvey W. Flournoy, 64, resident of the District the past 20 years, will be held tomorrow at 2 p. m. at the Lee funeral home, Fourth Street and Massachusetts Avenue Northwest. Mr. Flournoy was a member of Dawson Lodge of the Masons. Officiating will be Dr. Harry Evaul of Epworth Methodist Church.

He was a native of Richmond, Va. Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Emma Flournoy, 1004 East Capitol Street, and three children, John Thomas and Harvey Wilson Flournoy, jr., and Mrs. Helen Olivia Milner, all of this city.

Police Inspector Louis J. Stoll, 72, Dies at Brooke, Va.

Inspector Louis J. Stoll, 72, formerly a member of the Metropolitan Police in Washington, died at his home near Brooke, Stafford County, Virginia, last night.

He had retired from the Metropolitan Police with the rank of inspector 10 years ago. He had made his home in Virginia since then.

He is survived by his wife, two daughters and one son.

Funeral services will be held here on Friday.

Miss Ella Blaine's Rites Tomorrow

Miss Ella Wallace Blaine, 68, whose nursing career in the District covered almost four decades, died yesterday at National Homeopathic Hospital, where she was graduated as a nurse in 1903.

Services will be held tomorrow at 1 p. m. at Chambers funeral home, 1400 Chapin Street Northwest. Burial will be private.

Ensign Radabaugh Buried in Arlington

Ensign Joseph W. Radebaugh, 22, of New Orleans, who was killed in a plane crash at New York Naval Air Station Sunday, was buried in Arlington Cemetery yesterday.

Funeral services were conducted by Lieut. Stephen V. Hannon of the Navy Chaplain Corps. Pallbearers were Ensigns S. M. Van Eck, D. C. Howarth, V. McGuire, M. J. Mahoney, W. S. Moore and A. A. Clagett.

He Can't 'Get in the Scrap'

VITAL MATERIAL GOES BEGGING—John N. Owens, of 1020 Massachusetts Avenue Northwest, who tried vainly all day yesterday to give away his old furnace for war scrap. Called junk yards and Donald Nelson's office. Nelson's secretary gave him no satisfaction. Meanwhile, a new furnace is rusting in front yard because there's no room for it in basement. "A helluva note," says Owens. "I'm going to bed."

Randolph Asks Separate WPA District Here

The organization of a separate District of Columbia WPA region was proposed yesterday by Chairman Randolph of the House District Committee, in a letter to Brig. Gen. Philip B. Fleming, Federal Works Agency Administrator.

Randolph pointed out that a purely local administration of the District's projects and personnel would greatly increase the efficiency of the program here and probably heighten the public benefits accruing from the agency's programs.

The District currently is combined into one region with Maryland, and all local work must be approved and authorized in Baltimore.

It was pointed out that Delaware also was previously included in this unit, but had lately been set up as an independent unit. Randolph said that the amount of Washington's WPA work exceeded that of Delaware's, indicating that the District was of sufficient importance to warrant a separate director.

Moreover, he said, the formation of a District unit would entail no additional expense, since the same amount of administrative personnel would serve for both set-ups.

An autonomous Washington organization also would benefit by its close contact with the National Administration here, he added.

The administration of Lanham Act funds would be improved by such a reorganization, Randolph declared. He said that the Lanham emergency funds, administered here, were intended as an adjunct to WPA money and would best be assigned in cooperation with the WPA. Formation of a District unit would facilitate this cooperation, he contended.

New Gas Rate Hearings to Be Resumed

Hearings on the boost in gas rates by the Washington Gas Light Co. indicated by the sliding rule plan will be reconvened Friday morning at 10 o'clock in the board room of the District Building, the Public Utilities Commission announced last night.

The original hearings, begun August 18, were continued at the request of Harry Boothe, OPA counsel who appeared as an intervenor and urged that the Gas Light Co. forego the rate raise in the interest of preventing inflation. Boothe asked for three or four weeks in which to review the evidence and to prepare statements of his own.

Representatives of the company objected strenuously to Boothe's request, pointing out that September 1 was the set date for changing gas rates, and that every day past that, if operated on the present rates when higher ones are justified, would mean a loss to the company. They also indicated that, inflation or no inflation, the company was not willing to give up the raise. This is the first year that the sliding scale plan would operate to increase rates, all other times having worked to cause rate reduction.

This will be the first public hearing conducted by the PUC's new chairman, James M. Flanagan. It was controversy over the manner in which this rate hearing was being held last month that precipitated the decision of Flanagan and Commissioner Charles W. Kutz to unseat former Chairman Gregory Hankin and elect Flanagan in his place.

Randolph Henrick Funeral Set for Home Tomorrow

Services for Randolph A. Henrick, 52, Washington Terminal Co. employe 36 years, will be held at his home, 1109 Anacostia Road Southeast, tomorrow. Burial will be in Cedar Hill Cemetery.

Mr. Henrick, a foreman at the terminal, was stricken with an attack of heart disease while driving his car on Benning Road Tuesday. And Nothing Can Be Done About It

DID YOU HEAR THOSE TWO WOMEN ON THE RADIO A FEW MINUTES AGO?
NO, I DIDN'T.
THEY WERE VERY FUNNY— HAD A GOOD LINE OF COMEDY. ONE GAG THEY GOT OFF DRAGGED A LAUGH OUT OF ME
YES?
ONE OF 'EM SAID: "WERE YOU EXCITED WHEN YOU FIRST ASKED YOUR HUSBAND FOR MONEY?"
"OH, NO," SAID THE OTHER, "I WAS CALM — AND COLLECTED"
WELL?
WHY SHOULDN'T SHE BE CALM AND COLLECTED? IT'S NO DISGRACE TO ASK YOUR HUSBAND FOR MONEY. I SUPPOSE THAT SEEMS FUNNY TO YOU

Rich Girl-Poor Girl

By FAITH BALDWIN

FAITH BALDWIN

But standing before his mirror later, wrenching at his collar, he said to himself angrily: She expected me to kiss. Well, why didn't I?

In the morning, awakening to the pleasant odors of coffee percolating and bacon frying, Jonathan made the discovery that daylight had faded the subtly exciting colors and design of the previous night into more or less ordinary shades and pattern. He told himself severely, glaring at his lathered face in an unflattering mirror that, of course, he had dined with the gentleman who appeared to be Riverport's Public Benefactor No. 1, and that while this seeming character's daughter was indubitably provocative, oncoming and effervescent, there still remained no cogent reason why he, a sober young physician just beginning to practice in a new town, should find himself either flattered or disturbed. Certainly a professional man rapidly approaching the sere and yellow season of his thirtieth year could look upon a tip-tilted nose and challenging eyes and a warm, demanding mouth without becoming either notional or dizzy.

He did not put it to himself in so many words. He merely said, aloud and austerely, "Granting a whole lot of things, is there any reason to go into a spin over 'em?"

Having replied in a forceful and qualified negative, he proceeded to remove the lather and presently went whistling downstairs to a breakfast which was, as usual, perfection, and which Evelina, also as usual, deplored. Evelina, thought Jonathan, attacking orange juice and eggs, should have been born in an Oriental country in which her genius for understatement and depreciation could have found full scope.

"I hear," commented Evelina lingering, "that they've got a new butler up to Sutton's."

This was his cue to discuss the evening's entertainment with her. He responded cheerfully. He said, "Well, an old butler, at any rate. He didn't look new to me, he looked old."

"They come and go," offered Evelina mysteriously, and added something about "goings on." But the real crux of the matter was disclosed when, on her way to the kitchen, she inquired casually if he had enjoyed his dinner.

"Good dinner," Jonathan told her, smiling, "but not as good as any of yours."

Evelina snorted and remarked that she wasn't taken in by soft soap and that she was aware that there was more ways than one of killing a cat. With which cryptic remark she retired to the range over which she raised a clear high unemotional voice in a lusty rendition of one of the more lugubrious hymns.

CHAPTER X

Rose would want to know about the Sutton dinner also. Jonathan took her to the movies that night. It was Saturday and the majority of his patients would be shopping and not wasting their time in his office. The few who did drift in, drifted out again promptly. Pursuant to a tentative promise, he called for Rose and took her to the 9 o'clock show.

The Riverport motion picture house had, as Jonathan had already discovered, an excellent screen and a fairly large seating capacity. It needed it, for as yet it had no competition in the town. Vaudeville had recently invaded its stage and Rose and Jonathan, together with other more enthusiastic companions, sat through three terrific acts in as much silence as they could maintain. During the newsreel they discussed them, in whispers.

"Awful," said Rose, sighing. "I always feel so embarrassed for the poor things . . . and they do work so hard."

He inquired gravely, "What did you think of the impressionistic dancing—with a dash of adagio?"

"Was that what it was? I couldn't be sure."

"Neither could I. In fact, I wondered whether the lady—grandmotherly soul, wasn't she?—was suffering from a red hot appendix or unrequited love," he confessed.

Rose laughed and a neighbor shushed her violently as the feature went on, and the house rustled into comparative quiet.

Coming out of the theater was like old home week. Everybody they encountered knew Rose and almost everyone seemed to know Jonathan, whether he had met them previously or not. In fact, standing under the street light on a very chilly morning one large, overly robust lady exhibited, without shame, a remarkable wart on a Napoleonic nose. I'm afraid to have it taken off," she sighed. "I don't hold with surgery!"

Jonathan started to speak, was furiously pinched by Rose, and Bill Lynd, strolling up, emitted a warning cough. Said Bill calmly, "I'm sure if you'd call at Dr. Kimber's office, Mrs. Fritch—?" and linking his arm through Jonathan's led him away a step or two, hissing, "Keep your head . . . who do you think you are, a medicine man, dispensing free advice on a street corner?"

Everybody Meets At the Movies

Rose was laughing and Sally Sutton, coming out of the theater with Phil Dexter, saw the little group. She raised a manicured eyebrow and said something to her companion. Presently she strolled over to them and spoke without removing the long cigarette holder which she held in the corner of her mouth. "Hello, Kim," she said, smiling, "I see you've joined the Main Street gang . . ." She looked casually at Rose. "Oh, how are you, Rose?" she added and then, brightening, "If it isn't Bill Lynd!"

"It always has been," agreed Bill. Dexter, joining them, looked faintly uncomfortable. He hadn't seen Bill Lynd to speak to since an epic battle which had taken place a good many years before in which young Mr. Dexter had been ignominiously defeated.

Sally, hatless, the mink coat huddled about her, now withdrew the cigarette holder. She said, "We were just going down to Bert's for a soda. I persuaded Phil—by the way, you all know Phil, don't you? You remember him, Kim. He's the young man who wrapped me about the lamp post. This is Dr. Kimber, Phil—he goes around consoling young women who have been in auto accidents . . . Come on, join us. We thought a soft drink an appropriate end to a hard evening."

Rose said something, but no one heard her, and as it would become entirely too awkward to stand around street corners arguing and refusing, she permitted herself to be taken in tow. In Jonathan's car, riding the short distance to the ice cream parlor she said, irritated, "I don't know how we got into this."

"Neither do I," admitted Jonathan cheerfully.

"You haven't told me about last night. I hoped you would, after the picture."

"There isn't much to tell. A lot of conversation, food and drink. All very impressive," he answered.

Rose said, after a minute,

"You're a marked man. Sally's claimed you, tagged you, ordered you delivered."

"F. O. B." he inquired laughing, and Rose thought instantly, what a stupid thing for me to say; I wish I hadn't.

The ice cream parlor was crowded, but tables were immediately pushed together and room made available for their party. Sally Sutton and Phil Dexter were a rather overwhelming combination. Jonathan, drinking a frosted chocolate, watched Sally's spectacular appetite with amazement . . . a three-decker sandwich, a frosted coffee, it was astonishing, when one considered her flawless skin and her figure.

Rose was talking to Bill Lynd and Dexter, patently not overpleased at the turn of events, yawned openly and regarded the situation with disfavor. Jonathan regarded him with much the same feeling. Stocky, very dark, with heavy eyebrows and a weak mouth over a brutal chin, he was not especially prepossessing.

Sally lifted her glass and nodded over it to Jonathan. She said,

Sally's Invitation For Thanksgiving

"Here's how, mud in your eye and all that sort of thing. Look, Kim, we were planning a shindig over Thanksgiving. If there's anything in the world that gives me the jitters it's the groaning board surrounded by groaning relatives. So we though we'd go up to Placid . . . Come with us . . ."

He said, smiling, "I don't go in for winter sports."

"I'd teach you." She leaned nearer to him, and a wave of fragrance, flower-sweet, heavy, reached him. Her curly yellow head was close to his shoulder and Rose, looking up, was conscious of a definite and unwelcome pang. Bill said, low, "Predatory just about explains her . . ." and attacked his ice cream, smiling.

Sally was insisting. She was saying, "I'd like to discover just what sports you do go in for . . . ! Come on, we'd have a marvelous time."

Jonathan shook his head. He said,

"I couldn't leave——"

"Come," said Sally, amused, "don't tell me you've suddenly become the most sought after physician in town."

He colored, at that. He said, "No, of course not. But I have a few patients and they'd find me more easily on Senator Street than at Lake Placid. And moreover," he added, quite clearly, "I'm already booked for Thanksgiving dinner."

He looked across at Rose. Sally was silent for a moment. Then she said, "I see . . ." and smiled at the other girl. "School teacher wins first prize," she said lightly.

Phil Dexter's heavy face lightened somewhat. He focused his eyes on Rose as if he saw her for the first time. What he saw pleased him, apparently. He said, "That's so, you do teach; think you could teach me anything?"

Rose regarded him with distaste. She said casually, "I would not wonder." and then flushed at his shout of laughter . . . "Now, if you mean that the way I hope you mean it," he began, leaning forward.

"Your girl friend's rung the bell with Phil," Sally told Jonathan, without amusement, "and her boy friend doesn't like it," she added, not troubling to lower her voice, but observing Bill Lynd's quick, instinctive movement toward Rose with growing interest.

Phil asked, "Where've you been keeping yourself, Rose?"

"In Riverport," Rose told him, "with time out for Syracuse."

"I haven't seen you around," he insisted.

"I don't get around much," she said gravely.

Phil chuckled. He asked, "Look here, what's your job anyway, wiping little noses and fanning little pants down at Number Three?"

Bill grinned. He said, before Rose could answer,

"Was that your experience at Number Three . . . I remember you there, Phil. No, Rose teaches at High . . ."

Listen! with Glynn

One of John McCartney's most plaintive boasts is that he works for a living.

What's more, to prove it, John can show you every week a quite sizeable check which he receives from the Columbia Broadcasting System for allegedly doing same.

None the less, John has a pretty awful time of it convincing his fellow radio technicians that what he does can rightfully be called work. As to the righteousness of John's case, we leave it to you:

For John is the radio engineer who is responsible during the summer months for seeing that Kate Smith's noonday chat program, which you hear over WJSV every weekday, gets on the air. As you know, it's a 15-minute program devoted to giving you Kate's homely philosophy along with an interlarding of the news of the day.

The rub lies in the fact that this is all John has to do all summer. To do it he has to leave the confines of his home in New York City all during the summer months and spend them at Lake Placid, one of New York State's coolest and pleasantest summer resorts. Outside of the time spent on arranging the broadcasts—which means that he has to wake up in time to catch the 11 a. m. boat to Kate's island camp—and packing up his equipment afterward, John daily has to go through the ordeal of filling the rest of his day. He has to think up new places to fish, to go swimming or to play golf in the beautiful Adirondack Mountains. He has to find ways to spend his evenings, always with that awful prospect of having to get that boat in the mornings at 11 a. m.

The harrowing ritual sort of lets up over the weekends, when Kate doesn't broadcast, and then John can come into New York City and get away from it all.

We leave it to you: How would you like to have to put up with all this? For money!

Japs Reported Preparing to Quit Kinhwa

By the Associated Press

Chungking, China, Sept. 2.—Indications that the Japanese were preparing to abandon Kinhwa, old Chekiang capital and one of the last big bases held by the invaders in that eastern seaboard province, were reported in news dispatches from the front today as Chinese forces reached the environs of the city.

The Central News Agency correspondent at the front said vanguards of Chinese forces last Monday night saw the sky around the city tinged with red. The Chinese said it was apparent that the Japanese had begun to destroy the city.

Chinese Move on Canton

London, Sept. 2 (AP).—A Reuters dispatch from Chungking said Chinese troops advancing in Kwangtung Province were within 16 miles of Canton.

Previous reports had mentioned a Chinese offensive along the railway about 40 miles from the southern metropolis.

3 More Allied Ships Added To Subs' Toll

By the Associated Press

Sinking of three more merchantmen was disclosed in announcements yesterday from Atlantic ports.

Reports from Lisbon disclosed the submarine sinking of the British freighter Clan McClyster 40 miles north of Ponta Pargo, the Azores. Forty-four seamen in two lifeboats were picked up by the Portuguese sloop Pedro Nunes, while search continued for a third lifeboat carrying 16 other crewmen. The British ship's captain and radio operator were said to have perished in the torpedo explosion.

Destruction of another British merchant vessel, sunk in Midatlantic by two torpedoes, was reported from Dublin. Picked up two days after their craft sank, 45 survivors were landed at Dunmore, East Erie, from the Irish Shipping Co.'s Irish Willow.

A third United Nations ship—a Dutch freighter—was torpedoed and sunk within 7 minutes, dispatches from Port au Prince, Haiti, announced. Two crew members were killed, but 37 others were reported to have arrived at Aux Cayes.

Sinking of the three craft was withheld from the Associated Press tabulation of announced western Atlantic sinkings pending official identification and further details regarding the ships. To date, the Associated Press count of reported sinkings in the western Atlantic area since Pearl Harbor stands at 452.

Fate of Cargo Plane Plans Rests on Parleys Next Week

Senator McNary (Republican) of Oegon, said yesterday the fate of Henry J. Kaiser's plan to build giant cargo-carrying airplanes to aid the nation's war effort depended upon the outcome of conferences next week between Kaiser and the highest ranking Army and Navy officers.

The Senators said he believed the conference would give the go-ahead signal for constructing such planes, at least enough to test out the West Coast shipbuilder's claims.

The War Production Board has tentatively approved the plan on condition that Kaiser obtain the materials and machinery to carry out the construction without interfering with the war program.

Kaiser is due in Washington next week to discuss with Donald M. Nelson, chairman of the WPB, the report made by an aeronautical committee, which studied the proposal.

McNary conferred yesterday with Nelson and said he found the chairman sympathetic with the Kaiser plan for fast assembling of the planes. He said, however, that Nelson wanted Kaiser to explain his plan in detail to Gen. George C. Marshall, chief of staff; Admiral J. King, commander in chief of the fleet, and Admiral William Leahy, aide to the President. The three officers are in direct command of the Nation's offensive war operations and McNary said their approval would permit the Kaiser plan to be inaugurated.

Allied Bombers Smash at Japs' Buka Airdrome

General MacArthur's Headquarters, Australia, Sept. 3 (AP).—Allied bombers of General MacArthur's command made a heavy attack on the Japanese airdrome at Buka, at the northern tip of the Solomon Islands, in a night raid last night, unloading five tons of bombs along the runway and upon enemy installations, it was announced today.

A Japanese destroyer was hit in the attack, but results were not learned immediately, the daily headquarters communique stated.

New Guinea again received a major share of the Allies' attention, but ground fighting was confined to isolated Japanese remnants in the Milne Bay area at the extreme southeastern tip of the big island guarding the northern approaches to Australia itself.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborne

Two life masters skillfully maneuvered today's hand to a grand slam at hearts in a session of the world championship masters' pairs held in New York two weeks ago. B. Jay Becker and Harry J. Fishbein, both managers of bridge clubs, were the bidders, and Becker played the hand with his usual care to avoid accidents.

The ace of spades was opened, and Becker trumped with dummy's ace of hearts. His plan was to set up South's diamonds, developing four discards for four clubs; then the rest of his hand would be good hearts. To attempt the club finesse against the king would be foolhardy and unnecessary, as East probably had the king because of his spade overcall.

Becker cashed the ace of diamonds and then led a low diamond and trumped with queen of hearts. He entered dummy by leading a heart to the king, and returned another diamond, trumping with the jack. The diamonds in dummy were now all established, and he simply returned to the South hand with a trump to the ten, drawing East's last trump, and ran the diamonds for discards, West's diamond queen falling under the king.

Had declarer played the king of diamonds right after the ace, or ruffed low, East could have come in with a trump trick to spoil the grand slam.

It is an odd thing that grand slams are usually unlucky bids for the masters. In the finals of the world championship masters' teams of four E. N. Marcus of Boston tried two and both failed when distribution turned the breaks against him.

In the old days some of us used to think the four aces made it a rule never to bid a grand slam in a team-of-four match, believing it to offer poor percentage, and even in match-point contests the grand slam was a rarity. Today, however, the masters have opened up the game considerably, and grand slams are frequently bid, though not always made.
